(2) that the enjoining thereof pending the issuance of a complaint by the Commission under section 45 of this title, and until such complaint is dismissed by the Commission or set aside by the court on review, or the order of the Commission to cease and desist made thereon has become final within the meaning of section 45 of this title, would be to the interest of the public, the Commission by any of its attorneys designated by it for such purpose may bring suit in a district court of the United States or in the United States court of any Territory, to enjoin the dissemination or the causing of the dissemination of such advertisement. Upon proper showing a temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond. Any such suit shall be brought in the district in which such person, partnership, or corporation resides or transacts business.

(b) Whenever the Commission has reason to believe—

(1) that any person, partnership, or corporation is violating, or is about to violate, any provision of law enforced by the Federal Trade Commission, and

(2) that the enjoining thereof pending the issuance of a complaint by the Commission and until such complaint is dismissed by the Commission or set aside by the court on review, or until the order of the Commission made thereon has become final, would be in the interest of the public—

the Commission by any of its attorneys designated by it for such purpose may bring suit in a district court of the United States to enjoin any such act or practice. Upon a proper showing that, weighing the equities and considering the Commission's likelihood of ultimate success, such action would be in the public interest, and after notice to the defendant, a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction may be granted without bond: Provided, however, That if a complaint is not filed within such period (not exceeding 20 days) as may be specified by the court after issuance of the temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction, the order or injunction shall be dissolved by the court and be of no further force and effect: Provided further, That in proper cases the Commission may seek, and after proper proof, the court may issue, a permanent injunction. Any such suit shall be brought in the district in which such person, partnership, or corporation resides or transacts business.

The FTC is entitled to preliminary injunctive relief upon a proper showing that, weighing the equities and considering the FTC's likelihood of ultimate success, the granting of the injunction would be in the public interest.

[700] In the case at bar, petitioner, the FTC, issued an administrative complaint against respondents on October 15, 1974.[2] In the administrative complaint, the FTC alleged that respondents were violating Sections 45 and 52 of the Act by disseminating false and misleading advertisements. The FTC now seeks a preliminary injunction restraining respondents from advertising their obesity and weight control treatments as long as respondents use the drug Human Chorionic Gonadotropin (HCG), or any other drug, in their treatment, and as long as HCG or such other drug has not been approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) for use in weight reduction.

Respondents are corporations and individuals in the business of setting up, operating and promoting weight reduction clinics within (and in some instances outside of) the State of California. They provide management and support services to the licensed physicians and nurses who administer the treatments offered by the weight loss clinics. Respondents place advertisements for their clinics in newspapers, magazines, and on television.

The matter came on regularly for hearing on December 9, 1974. The Court having considered the pleadings, affidavits and briefs on file in this action and all the evidence, both oral and documentary as well as extensive oral argument, and good cause appearing, the motion for a temporary injunction is denied for the reasons hereinafter set forth. It is to be emphasized that nothing in this Memorandum Opinion and Order is to be taken as affecting in any wise the decision on the merits of the administrative complaint filed by the FTC. No doubt much more evidence from both sides will be presented at the hearings on the administrative complaint. Everything stated herein refers solely to the motion for a temporary injunction.

I. STANDARD FOR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

[1,2] In evaluating a motion for a preliminary injunction under the Act, the Court does not apply the traditional equity standards of judicial review. Section 53 of the Act permits the issuance of a preliminary injunction upon a proper showing that weighing the equities, and considering the FTC's likelihood of ultimate success, such action would be in the public interest. The statute does not define "proper showing" and there is sparse judicial interpretation of the requisites of a "proper showing". The legislative history of Section 53 makes it clear that since the FTC is a public agency, suing on behalf of the public, it is excused from making the traditional equity showing of irreparable injury. Joint Statement of the Committee Conference, H.R.Rep.No.93-617, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. (1973), page 31.

[3] There is a split in judicial opinion whether the Court, in evaluating the motion for a preliminary injunction, need only determine that the FTC has reason to believe that the alleged violation has taken place (Federal Trade Commission v. Rhodes Pharmacal Co., 191 F.2d 744 (7th Cir. 1971) or whether the Court must also balance the equities. FTC v. National Health Aids, 108 F.Supp. 340 (D.C.Md.1952). Considering that the statute specifically directs the Court to weigh the equities and considering the extraordinary and important nature of injunctive relief, I am of the view that the District Court must do more than determine if the administrative agency had reasonable cause to believe that the alleged violation had taken place. Reasonable belief of a violation is enough to justify the FTC seeking a preliminary injunction, but in evaluating the motion for preliminary injunction the District Court must look to the FTC's reasonable cause to believe that a violation has taken place, and must also as a separate factor weigh the equities [701] in favor of granting or denying the preliminary injunction. FTC v. National Health Aides, supra.

II. THE FACTS

The following facts are adduced from the evidence, both oral and documentary, taken at the hearing. They are generally applicable to all respondents and are pertinent for the purpose of deciding this motion for preliminary injunction. The operation of the clinics owned by the individual respondents vary in certain details from others, but such details are not significant in deciding this motion.

A. The Treatment Program

Respondents' weight reduction clinics utilize the "Simeons" or "Simeon's" method for weight loss. The method consists of a four to six week treatment program of a 500 calorie diet, continuous medical counseling, and daily injection of HCG in a 125 I.U. dosage. HCG is a hormone or endocrine drug derived from the urine of pregnant women. HCG is marketed by a number of pharmaceutical houses and has been approved for the treatment of several conditions other than weight loss. For example, HCG is labeled for, and FDA approved for, use in the treatment of sterility due to anovulation, sterility due to hypogonadism, and for delayed onset of puberty. HCG has not been certified by the FDA for use in the treatment of obesity. However, HCG has been used for many years by physicians throughout the United States in the treatment of obesity.

Prospective patients of the clinics are sometimes given other drugs which are not approved by the FDA for weight reduction such as diuretics. The patients are not told that HCG or the other drugs employed lack FDA approval for the treatment of obesity or weight control.

The weight reduction treatment is administered by licensed physicians and nurses. Respondents only manage the clinics, they do not administer the treatments. On the initial visit to the clinic, a prospective patient is examined by a physician and given diagnostic tests to determine if the individual is eligible for the treatment program. Individuals suffering from diseases for which HCG is contraindicated are rejected from the program. If accepted into the program, the patient is placed on the diet and injection regimen. Dosages and frequency of injections are sometimes varied to suit the individual patient's needs.

The cost of the clinics' programs ranges from $100 to $300 for a course of treatment. Simeons Weight Clinics Foundation charges from $188 to $368 or more for their obesity treatment. Medical Weight Loss, Inc. charges $245 for their average obesity treatment. Bariatric Medical Clinics Management Corporation charges from $135 to $185 for their obesity treatment. Weight Reduction Medical Clinic charges from $170 to $240 for their obesity treatment. HCG Weight Clinics Foundation charges between $200 and $300 on the average for their obesity treatment. These average charges include the cost of various laboratory tests, a medical history, and the HCG injections.

The cost of respondents' obesity treatments is comparable to, or less than, charges by other private physicians or by university clinics for weight reduction treatments. Assuming a treatment program based on daily visits were available at other private or university clinics, the cost would be about $400 to $500.

B. The Advertisements

Respondents advertise their weight loss clinics in magazines, newspapers, and on television. The advertisements suggest that the treatment method is safe, effective, and medically approved. The following are illustrative of the advertisements disseminated by respondents:

1. Simeon Weight Clinics Foundation:

Simeon Weight Clinics Foundation Declares War on Weight.

2. Medical Weight Loss, Inc.:

III. THE ISSUES

A. Alleged Violations of the Act

The FTC contends that respondents have violated Sections 45 and 52 of the Act. As amended by the Magnuson-Moss Warranty—Federal Trade Commission Improvement Act which became effective January 4, 1975 (P.L. 93-637, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. (1974)), Section 45 provides in pertinent part:

> (a)(1) Unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, are declared unlawful.

Section 52 as amended by the Magnuson-Moss Warranty—Federal Trade Commission Improvement Act provides:

> (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, or corporation to disseminate, or cause to be disseminated, any false advertisement—
> (1) By United States mails, or in or having an effect upon commerce by any means, for the purpose of inducing, or which is likely to induce, directly or indirectly the purchase of food, drugs, devices, or cosmetics; or
> (2) By any means, for the purpose of inducing, or which is likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase in or having an effect upon commerce of food, drugs, devices, or cosmetics.

[4] Section 15 of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 55, in pertinent part, defines "false advertisement" to mean:

> An advertisement * * * which is misleading in a material respect; and in determining whether any advertisement is misleading, there shall be taken into account [among other things] * * * the extent to which the advertisement fails to reveal facts material in the light of such representations or material with respect to consequences which may result from the use of the commodity to which the advertisement relates under the conditions prescribed in said advertisement, or under such conditions as are customary or usual.

Thus, an advertisement may be a "false advertisement" both for the statements or representations it actually makes, and for the statements or representations it fails to make.

Since respondents' clinics are registered with the State of California as a pre-paid health plan under the Knox-Mills Health Plan Act (California Government Code § 12530 et seq.), the clinics have the right to advertise their availability. The FTC does not take issue with the fact that the clinics advertise, but rather with the type of advertisements respondents use. Specifically, [703] the FTC contends that respondents' advertisements are false and deceptive because:

1. The advertisements represent that the weight reduction treatment is safe, effective, and medically approved, when in fact it is not;

2. The advertisements fail to mention the material facts that:

(a) The treatments are based upon the injection of a hormone drug;

(b) That the drug is not recognized by experts as safe and/or effective for use;

(c) That there is no valid scientific evidence that the drug promotes weight loss that could not be achieved by diet alone; and

(d) That the drug is not approved for use in weight reduction by the FDA and, on the basis of current evidence, could not be approved if its manufacturers attempted to obtain a license; and

3. The advertisements contravene the spirit of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. § 301 et seq.) by promoting a weight reduction treatment based on a drug that has not been FDA approved for weight control.

B. Commerce

Respondents contend that Section 45 of the Act does not apply to them since their advertisements are not "in or affecting" commerce. Respondents base this contention on the fact that their California clinics have never offered weight reduction treatments to out-of-state residents. Since all of their California clinics are located at least four hours' drive from the state borders and since the Simeons method requires daily clinic visits, respondents claim there is no feasible way they could ever service out-of-state customers.

[5,6] I find that respondents' advertisements are sufficiently involved in or affecting commerce to invoke the jurisdiction of Section

45 of the Act. It is undisputed that the respondents place their advertisements in newspapers, magazines, and on television with out-of-state circulations and broadcasting ranges. The Act is aimed at prohibiting the dissemination of false advertising, not with prohibiting the actual sales that may flow from the publicity. Even without an out-of-state sale, the fact that respondents cause their advertisements to be disseminated out of state is enough to fulfill the commerce requirements of the Act. Shafe v. Federal Trade Commission, 256 F.2d 661 (6th Cir. 1958).

Furthermore, several of the respondents operate weight reduction clinics outside of California. Although a prospective out-of-state patient may not be able to make the four-hour trip to one of the California clinics, the advertisement published in California and circulated out of state may well cause an out-of-state customer to visit a more conveniently located clinic outside of California.

Respondents further contend that Section 52 of the Act does not apply to them since they offer and advertise a treatment program, not the sale of a drug, device, or cosmetic. I find that respondents' advertisements are sufficiently likely to induce the purchase of a drug to invoke the jurisdiction of Section 52 of the Act.

[7] Respondents' claim that their advertisements are not aimed at inducing the purchase of a drug, but rather deal with a treatment program is a distinction without a difference in this case. Although respondents' advertisements do not specifically mention HCG or the injection regimen, HCG injections are a crucial component in the treatment program. Anyone accepted into the program is placed on daily HCG injections and a portion of the treatment fee goes toward the cost of these injections. The hypodermic injection of HCG legally constitutes a sale transaction although the injection is administered by a physician or nurse and the drug is never directly placed in the hands of the purchaser. Ratigan v. United States, 88 F.[704]2d 919 (9th Cir. 1937). Therefore, anyone responding to the advertised treatment program will, in fact, purchase the drug HCG. Dissemination of advertisements publicizing this drug-based treatment is enough to meet the requirement of Section 52 that the advertisement in or affecting commerce is likely to induce the purchase of a drug. Mueller v. United States, 262 F.2d 443 (5th Cir. 1958).

C. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

1. Misrepresentations

[8] I find that the FTC does not have a strong likelihood of establishing at the administrative proceedings on their complaint before the Commission that the respondents' advertisements are false and misleading either on account of material misstatements or material omissions. The Court must analyze the advertisements of respondents in their entirety in order to ascertain the net impression which the advertisement is likely to make upon the general public. FTC v. Sterling Drug Inc., 317 F.2d 669 (2d Cir. 1963). Taken as a whole, I find that respondents' advertisements indicate that they offer a safe, effective, medically approved weight loss program. I find there is a strong likelihood that the Commission will ultimately determine that in truth this is just what respondents do offer. The advertisements do not mention HCG, but rather publicize the treatment program as a whole. Respondents', the FTC's and the Court's medical experts all agree that the six week, 500 calorie, restricted diet that is part of the treatment program will produce weight loss. Although general medical consensus does not consider HCG effective in physiologically producing weight loss, the HCG component of the program may make it psychologically easier for the overweight patient to maintain the strict diet. Whether or not HCG actually has a physiological or psychological effect, there is substantial evidence indicating that the treatment program as a whole does result in weight loss. This is what respondents' advertisements claim.

I find there is a strong likelihood that the Commission will ultimately determine that respondents' treatment is safe. There is no evidence to show that HCG is unsafe in the 125 I.U. dosages used in the Simeons method. The pharmacological effect of the drug HCG has not been extensively reported in the medical literature. There have been no totally adequate and well-controlled studies establishing either the safety or the lack of safety of HCG in weight reduction treatments. The FDA has not yet conducted hearings on this matter. The FDA has, however, found HCG safe when used in much larger dosages for other purposes. There is no reason to believe these findings, based upon adequate and well-controlled studies of HCG for other uses, do not also demonstrate the safety of HCG in the treatment of obesity. Several studies that are less than totally adequate and well controlled indicate that HCG is safe for use in the treatment of obesity.

Nor has clinical experience with the drug suggested a safety problem. HCG was first used for the treatment of obesity in the United States in 1954. The Physicians' Desk Reference (a compendium of package inserts for various drugs) for the years 1958–1967 inclusive approved the use of HCG in the treatment of obesity. Thousands of patients over the past 20 to 25 years have been treated for obesity with the 125 I.U. dosages given in the Simeons method. These years of clinical experience with HCG have not indicated that the drug is unsafe.

It is true that an individual following the Simeons 500 calorie diet does experience some protein loss due to the restricted food intake. However, there has been no showing that the short-term diet is actually "unsafe". When one considers the health hazards involved in obesity and the resulting health benefits from the weight loss achieved from the short-term restricted diet, there is a strong likelihood that the Simeons method will ultimately be determined to be safe.

[705] I also find that it is unlikely that the Commission will determine that the advertisements misrepresent the fact that the weight reduction program is medically approved. Although HCG has not been approved by the FDA for use in weight loss, this does not mean that the treatment program does not have the approval of the medical community. Although the majority of physicians do not believe that HCG physiologically promotes weight loss, many physicians with extensive practices in weight control do believe that HCG has a psychological or placebo[3] effect that is beneficial in the weight treatment program. For example, the Court-appointed expert witness, Dr. John Karam, the Associate Director of the Metabolic Research Unit for the University of California, indicated that he thought the program as a whole was effective and that in the context of the counseling program and the diet, the HCG injections might be "functionally effective".

2. Material Omissions

I find that the FTC does not have a strong likelihood of establishing that respondents have violated the Act by failing to include the material facts that the treatments are based upon the injection of a hormone drug; that the drug is not recognized by experts as safe and/or effective for use; that there is no valid scientific evidence that the drug promotes weight loss that could not be achieved by diet alone; and that the drug is not approved for use in weight reduction by the FDA and, on the basis of current evidence, could not be approved for such a use.

(a). Failure to Inform Patient of Use of Unapproved Drug

[9] Both respondents' and the FTC's experts agree that it is not general medical practice to inform a patient whether or not a drug is FDA approved. Respondents manage the clinics and advertise the availability of the treatment program. Licensed physicians and nurses prescribe and administer the actual treatment. Although it is perfectly proper for a prepaid health plan to advertise under the Knox-Hill Act (California Government Code § 12530 et seq.), under the medical canons of ethics, the individual doctor is precluded from advertising. Since the individual doctors are responsible for the treatment, the FTC, by insisting on the inclusion of what the treatment will entail in the advertisements, is asking the individual physicians to advertise what it is they, not the respondents, will do. Not only would this be contrary to medical ethics, it is beyond the scope of the FTC's powers. The direct control of medical practice has been left to the states and is beyond the power of the federal government. Linder v. United States, 268 U.S. 5, 45 S.Ct. 446, 69 L.Ed. 819 (1925).

[3] A placebo is a substance having no pharmacological effect, but which is given to a patient who supposes it to be an effective medicine for the condition for which it is prescribed. Because of the patient's belief in the drug, the substance will often prove to be an effective medicine.

Furthermore, forcing respondents to advertise that HCG was no more effective than diet alone, would destroy a valuable psychological component of the program. Although there is no scientific evidence to indicate that HCG physiologically promotes weight loss, there is medical consensus that HCG has a psychological or placebo effect that makes it easier for a patient to maintain the strict, 500 calorie diet. Placebos are widely used in medical practice. Their benefits are derived from the fact that the patient believes the drug will work. A physician does not normally inform a patient that a placebo is being used since this would destroy the effectiveness of the drug. If respondents were forced to advertise that the HCG was not any more effective than diet alone, they would be forced to destroy the patient's belief in the drug and the medically acknowledged beneficial placebo effects that result from this belief. Rather than protecting the public, this disclosure might actually harm the overweight and obese individuals who have heretofore [706] been able to stick to the Simeons method and lose weight precisely because they believed that HCG was helping them.

(b). Use of "New Drug"

I find that the FTC does not have a good likelihood of ultimately establishing that respondents violate Sections 45 and 52 of the Act because their advertisements fail to state that their treatment program is based on a drug that has not been approved by the FDA for weight loss. The Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. § 355) authorizes the FDA to restrain the introduction into interstate commerce of any new drug unless the drug has been approved by the FDA.

Under the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. § 301 et seq.), it is illegal to market and label a "new drug" for a use that is not FDA approved. As defined by the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. § 321(p)), a new drug is a drug that has not been "generally recognized among experts * * * as safe and effective for use under the conditions prescribed, recommended, or suggested in the labeling thereof". The FTC argues that HCG is a "new drug" within the meaning of the FDA Act and has not been FDA approved for weight loss. The FTC contends that it is, therefore, unfair and false to permit the dissemination of advertisements for a treatment which is based on this unapproved "new drug" within the meaning of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act.

[10] The Court need not reach the question of whether or not HCG is a "new drug". Even assuming arguendo that HCG were a "new drug", it would not be a violation of Sections 45 or 52 of the Act to advertise a treatment program that utilized this unapproved "new drug". Whether or not HCG is a "new A "NEW drug", respondents are not required to seek FDA approval for the use of HCG in treatments administered by licensed physicians. The FDA has stated that the 1938 Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act and the 1962 amendments to that Act did not intend to interfere in or to regulate the practice of medicine between the physician and the patient. The FDA has stated that if a drug that has FDA approval for specific uses is used by a treating and prescribing physician for an unapproved use, this is not considered a "new drug" use that would require the physician to file an investigational new drug plan or to submit a new drug application:

> * * * the physician may, as part of the practice of medicine, lawfully prescribe a different dosage for his patient, or may otherwise vary the conditions of use from those approved in the package insert, without informing or obtaining the approval of the Food and Drug Administration.
> This interpretation of the Act is consistent with congressional intent as indicated in the legislative history of the 1938 Act and the drug amendments of 1962. Throughout the debate leading to inactment, there were repeated statements that Congress did not intend the Food and Drug Administration to interfere with medical practice and references to the understanding that the bill did not purport to regulate the practice of medicine as between the physician and the patient. 37 Fed.Reg. 16503 (1972).

Therefore, whether or not HCG is a new drug, the FDA does not require these respondents to seek FDA approval prior to its prescription in their weight-control treatments.

[11] Furthermore, the FDA does not have jurisdiction to regulate the administration of a drug by a physician. In order to invoke the jurisdiction of the FDA, 21 U.S.C. § 355(a), requires a person to:

> * * * introduce or deliver * * * into interstate commerce any new drug * * *.

Even assuming arguendo that HCG is a new drug under the definition of new drug (21 U.S.C. § 321(p)), the California physician in his private treatment of a California patient with HCG is engag[707]ing in a manifestly different quantitative and qualitative act than introducing or delivering for introduction into interstate commerce. The FDA interpretation of the 1938 Act and its 1962 Amendments does not treat the use of HCG by a treating and prescribing physician as being in interstate commerce. The FDA has stated:

> If an approved new drug is shipped in interstate commerce with the approved package inserts, and neither the shipper nor the recipient intend that it be used for an unapproved purpose, the requirements of section 505 of the Act are satisfied. Once the new drug is in a local pharmacy after interstate shipment, the physician may, as part of the practice of medicine, lawfully prescribe a different dosage for his patient, or may otherwise vary the conditions of use from those approved in the package insert, without informing or obtaining the approval of the Food and Drug Administration. 37 Fed.Reg. 16503 (1972).

Since it is not illegal for respondents' clinics to use HCG for weight control, it is unlikely that the Commission will ultimately determine that it is illegal for respondents to advertise this legally permissible treatment plan.

D. Balancing the Equities

In deciding whether the FTC has made a proper showing that equitable relief should be granted, the Court must also balance all of the equities. The respondents argue that an injunction prohibiting their advertising as long as they use HCG or any other unapproved drug, in their treatment would be financially ruinous. Balanced against this, the Court must consider the possible harm to consumers which may result from the use of the unapproved drug. The Court must also consider the cost to the consumers.

I find that the equities weigh against granting the requested relief. HCG has been widely used in clinical medicine both for weight reduction and for other treatment purposes. There is no evidence that HCG administered in the 125 I.U. dosages prescribed in the Simeons method is unsafe. Although HCG is contraindicated for use in individuals with diabetes mellitus and tumor of the pituitary gland, respondents eliminate such persons from their treatment program during the initial screening and testing visit.

Since the cost of the Simeons treatment is the same as, or less than, the cost of comparable university endocrine clinic programs for weight reduction, the public is not injured by inflated prices for the treatments they are receiving.

Although the medical opinion is divided on the efficacy of HCG in weight reduction, respondents have demonstrated that their treatment program, which relies heavily on the HCG injections, does help many people to lose weight. In balancing the equities, I must also consider the needs of these obese people to have readily available, effective weight reduction treatments which meet their physiological and psychological needs. The success of the treatment, even if only successful for a limited portion of the population, weighs heavily against granting the injunctive relief.

I find that respondents' business would suffer financially if they were precluded from advertising. Respondents require a high volume of business generated by advertising to sustain their specialized medical practice at a reasonably low cost to the public. Although respondents' business losses would not be controlling if there were proof of harm to the public (FTC v. National Health Aids, supra), in the instant case, where the public has not been injured by the Simeons weight treatments, the equities favor denying the injunctive relief.

IV. CONCLUSION

[12] I find that the FTC has not made a proper showing that there is reason to believe respondents have violated Sections 45 and 52 of the Act. Accordingly, I deny the FTC's motion for a preliminary injunction.

[708] Pursuant to Rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure this Memorandum Opinion constitutes the Court's Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, and pursuant thereto:

It is ordered, That:

1. The FTC's motion for a preliminary injunction is denied.
2. Respondents shall bear the costs of the fee for the Court's appointed expert witness, Dr. John Karam. Dr. Karam's fee shall be two hundred dollars ($200). The fee shall be paid directly to Dr. Karam and payment shall be made by March 25, 1975. Evidence of such payment shall be filed with the Court by March 25, 1975. Dr. Karam's address is University of California Medical Center, H.S.W. Room 1141, 501 Parnassus Avenue, San Francisco, California 94143.
3. Respondents shall submit a judgment in accordance with the foregoing by March 21, 1975.

CLAUDE THIRET et al. v. F.T.C.*

Nos. 74-1100, 74-1112. F.T.C. Docket No. 8875

(United States Court of Appeals, Tenth Circuit, March 18, 1975)

1. ONLY IF SUPPORTED BY SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE ARE FINDINGS OF F.T.C. CONCLUSIVE.

   [176] Findings of Federal Trade Commission on factual issues are conclusive on appeal only if the findings are supported by substantial evidence.

2. F.T.C. FINDINGS SHOULD BE CLOSELY SCRUTINIZED WHERE COMMISSION OVERRULES ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE'S FINDINGS AND SUBSTITUTES OWN, AND COURT'S TASK IS TO DETERMINE WHETHER COMMISSION'S FINDINGS ARE SUPPORTED BY SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

   Where Federal Trade Commission in effect overrules the Administrative Law Judge and substitutes its findings for those of the Judge, the Commission's findings should be closely scrutinized; however, even though the Judge and the Commission may disagree as to the prop[177]er findings, reviewing court's task is still to determine whether the Commission's findings are supported by substantial evidence.

3. F.T.C. FINDINGS WERE SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

   Federal Trade Commission's findings regarding unfair and deceptive trade practices which were engaged in by sellers and installers of steel siding on residential properties, i.e., deceptions as to extent of warranty, lower heating and air-conditioning bills and use of a buyer's premises as a "model home" enabling the buyer to receive commissions, were supported by substantial evidence.

* Reported in 512 F.2d 176 (1975). For case before the Commission, see 83 F.T.C. 1004.

4. WITNESS SATISFACTION WITH PRODUCT IS NOT CONTROLLING ON ISSUE OF USE OF UNFAIR OR DECEPTIVE PRACTICES.

Fact that many witnesses indicated overall satisfaction with steel siding was not controlling on issue of whether seller and installer of such siding had engaged in unfair and deceptive trade practices, some of which included misrepresentations as to warranty coverage and use of a purchaser's premises as a "model home" thereby allegedly enabling the purchaser to receive commission.

5. CAPACITY TO DECEIVE, NOT ACTUAL DECEPTION, IS ESSENTIAL TO FINDINGS OF UNFAIR OR DECEPTIVE PRACTICES.

Evidence of actual deception is not necessarily essential to a finding of unfair and deceptive trade practices; it is the capacity to deceive which is important.

6. ONCE VIOLATION IS FOUND TO EXIST, F.T.C. HAS CONSIDERABLE LATITUDE IN FASHIONING EFFECTIVE CEASE AND DESIST ORDER.

Federal Trade Commission has considerable latitude in fashioning an effective cease and desist order once an unfair trade practice is found to exist; all that is necessary is that the Commission's remedial orders have a reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist.

7. HYPOTHETICAL SITUATIONS SHOULD NOT MODIFY OR NARROW REMEDIAL ORDERS IN UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICE CASES.

A remedial order entered in an unfair trade practice case should ordinarily not be modified or narrowed because of hypothetical situations where lawful conduct could conceivably be prohibited by the cease and desist order.

8. PROPRIETY OF CONSENT ORDER WAS NOT CONTROLLED BY FACT THAT CORRECTIVE ACTION WAS TAKEN TO BRING SALES CONTRACTS INTO LINE WITH PROVISIONS OF TRUTH IN LENDING ACT.

Fact that sellers and installers of steel siding took corrective action to bring their sales contracts into line with provisions of the Truth in Lending Act and, in effect, promised to sin no more, was not controlling on issue of propriety of a cease and desist order.

9. WHERE GENERAL MANAGER WAS IN COMMAND POSITION AND HAD CONTROL OF THE ACTUAL GUILTY PARTIES, HE WAS PROPERLY MADE SUBJECT TO CEASE AND DESIST ORDER.

General manager of corporate seller and installer of steel siding for residential premises was properly made subject of Federal Trade Commission's cease and desist order, which required that two corporations and two officers thereof cease and desist from engaging in certain acts and practices found to be unfair and deceptive, where manager was in a command position and had control over the salesmen, who allegedly were the ones actually guilty of the unfair practices.

10. COMMAND TO CORPORATION TO CEASE AND DESIST IS A COMMAND TO THOSE OFFICIALLY RESPONSIBLE FOR CONDUCT OF ITS AFFAIRS.

A command to a corporation to cease and desist from engaging in certain practices which have been found to be unfair and deceptive is a command to those who are officially responsible for the conduct of its affairs.

On petition to review order to cease and desist, court held that where Commission overrules the findings of the Administrative Law Judge and substitutes its own findings, those findings are subject to close scrutiny; the F.T.C.'s findings were supported by substantial evidence; that the capacity of a defendant to deceive, not actual deception, was essential to a finding of unfair and deceptive trade practices; and plaintiff's promise "to sin no more" was not controlling on issue of the propriety of the order to cease and desist.

Order affirmed.

MCWILLIAMS, Circuit Judge:

[178] These consolidated cases involve two petitions for review of an order of the Federal Trade Commission that the petitioners cease and desist from certain acts and practices found by the Commission to be unfair and deceptive under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. 15 U.S.C. § 45. The order of the Commission also provided that petitioners cease and desist from certain other acts and practices found to be in violation of the Truth-in-Lending Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1601 et seq., and Regulation Z, 12 C.F.R. 226, promulgated thereunder.

The petitioners are engaged in the business of selling and installing steel siding on residential properties in Colorado, Wyoming, Nebraska, Kansas and New Mexico. One of the petitioners, Certified Building Products, Inc., was incorporated in the early 1950's, and ceased doing business in November 1970. Certified Improvements Company, another petitioner, had been dormant since its organization in 1961 and was activated in January 1970 to carry on the business previously conducted by Certified Building Products. Michael Thiret, also one of the petitioners, was president and sole owner of Certified Building Products. Claude Thiret, the remaining petitioner, was a salesman for Certified Building Products from about 1953 to 1968, at which time he became the general manager for that company. When Certified Improvements Company was activated in January 1970, Claude Thiret became its president and he made a cash contribution for which he received 40% of the company stock. Michael Thiret then became the vice-president of Certified Improvements and by virtue of his cash contribution to the company he received 60% of its stock.

Based on its investigation the Commission issued a complaint against Certified Building Products, Inc., Certified Improvements Company, Michael Thiret, Claude Thiret and one Jack Bitman, who was the secretary-treasurer of Certified Improvements Company. In Count 1 of the complaint it was alleged that the respondents had violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act by falsely and deceptively representing that their siding materials were being offered for sale at a special reduced price for a limited time only; that purchasers of the siding material would realize a 50% saving in their air-conditioning and heating bills; that the siding materials would never require repairing; that the siding materials were unconditionally guaranteed for 30 years; that homes of prospective purchasers had been specially selected as model homes, and, after installation, such homes would be used for demonstrating and advertising purposes for which the purchasers of siding material would receive allowances, discounts, or commissions; and that purchasers of the siding materials would receive enough commissions to obtain their own installation at little or no cost. Count 1 also charged that the respondents had violated Section 5 by negotiating customer obligations thus obtained to third parties, thereby cutting off certain defenses which might otherwise have been available to the customer who defaulted on his installment payments.

Count 2 of the complaint alleged that the respondents had violated the Truth-in-Lending Act and its implementing Regulation Z relating to the extension of credit to customers.

A prehearing conference was held before the Administrative Law Judge, during which Michael and Claude Thiret were deposed. As we understand it, at the time of this so-called prehearing conference it was contemplated that a consent decree would be entered as concerns the two business entities, i.e., Certified [179] Building Products and Certified Improvements Company, and Michael Thiret. The prehearing conference was apparently held for the primary purpose of ascertaining the degree of involvement, if any, on the part of Claude Thiret and Jack Bitman. In any event, based on the testimony of Michael and Claude Thiret given at this prehearing conference, Claude Thiret and Jack Bitman filed motions to dismiss based on the proposition that neither had any control over the activities of the salesmen who were doing the actual selling of the steel sidings.

In this posture, then, the matter was certified to the Commission by the Administrative Law Judge. The Commission, however, rejected the proposed consent decree as being inadequate, and denied the motions to dismiss made by Claude Thiret and Jack Bitman.

The entire matter then came on for full hearing before the Administrative Law Judge. After hearing the testimony of some twenty-two witnesses, the Judge dismissed both counts in the complaint as to all respondents. As to Count 1, the Judge found that complaint counsel had failed to sustain its burden of proof.

As to Count 2, though the respondents were found to have violated Regulation Z, the violation was characterized as only "technical," and not substantive in nature. Further, the Judge found that since the practices in question had been discontinued and that the respondents were unlikely to resume them in the future, there was no need for a cease and desist order.

Complaint counsel then appealed the matter to the Commission, and the latter in its decision modified the Judge's order in substantial particulars. The Commission substituted its findings for those of the Judge with respect to Count 1, the Commission finding that the evidence sustained most of the allegations of unfair and deceptive trade practices as set forth in the complaint. The Commission also concluded that the violations of the Truth-in-Lending Act should be prohibited. Accordingly, cease and desist orders were issued in connection with both counts of the complaint as to all respondents, except Jack Bitman. The four petitioners in the present consolidated proceeding in this court, namely, the two business entities, Michael Thiret and Claude Thiret, seek review of the orders thus entered.

The questions to be resolved are as follows: (1) Are the findings of fact as made by the Commission supported by substantial evidence on the record as a whole; (2) do the findings in turn support the remedial orders entered by the Commission; and (3) is Claude Thiret properly held to be subject to the cease and desist orders? In our view the answer to each of the questions is in the affirmative.

[1,2] The applicable statute provides that "the findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive." 15 U.S.C. § 45(c). This statutory language has been held to mean that the findings of the Commission as to facts are conclusive on the courts if the findings be supported by substantial evidence. Adolph Coors Company v. F.T.C., 497 F.2d 1178 (10th Cir. 1974), and OKC Corp. v. F.T.C., 455 F.2d 1159 (10th Cir. 1972). Where, as here, the Commission in effect overrules the Judge and substitutes its findings for those of the Judge, the Commission's findings should be closely scrutinized. However, even though the Judge and the Commission may disagree as to the proper findings, our task is still to determine whether the Commission's findings are supported by substantial evidence. Universal Camera Corp. v. Labor Bd., 340 U.S. 474, 496, 71 S.Ct. 456, 95 L.Ed. 456 (1951).

[3-5] Our study of the record as made in the instant case leads us to conclude that the findings of the Commission regarding unfair and deceptive trade practices are supported by substantial evidence. More than a score of persons who had purchased steel siding from the petitioners testified as to the selling tactics practiced upon them by [180] petitioners' salesmen. And to us there was a remarkable similarity in the testimony of these several witnesses. In each instance the salesmen hired by the petitioners to go out in the field and sell steel siding were using pressure tactics, of one form or another.

Many of the witnesses testified that they were led to believe that they were receiving special discount prices in exchange for use of their homes as "showcases" or "model homes," when in fact such prices were those normally charged by petitioners. In some instances, a magazine advertisement showing the manufacturer's suggested retail price for the steel siding to be higher than that charged by petitioners was used to support representations that discounts were given in connection with the model homes plan. Customers were generally informed that they must make immediate decisions, or the salesmen would go elsewhere with their offers.

Customers were told that they would receive referral commissions for finding new purchasers for petitioners' siding and services. Some who testified were informed that they could earn substantial sums and perhaps even pay for their siding through commissions. Signs were to be placed on the properties with new siding and advertising pictures were to be taken. In one case, petitioners' salesman borrowed the customer's hammer and tore off some existing siding to dramatize the "before" part of a "before and after" set of pictures for such advertising. Few, if any, of the properties ever had signs placed on them and none of the customers who testified saw any advertising pictures using his home. Several customers were led to believe that petitioners' salesmen would bring prospective buyers to their "model homes" and that they would then receive commissions if purchases ensued. The salesmen did not, to the witnesses' knowledge, bring anyone for such purpose. Some customers received small amounts of commissions, but none was able to finance to any appreciable degree the purchase of his siding.

Petitioners' salesmen also represented orally and through printed material that installation of their siding would bring significant savings in costs of heating and cooling the homes. Witnesses testified that they generally noticed little improvement. Although customers were told that the siding was unconditionally guaranteed for thirty years, they later received written guarantees from the manufacturer covering only manufacturer's defects and excluding from coverage damage due to the elements or to installation workmanship. Replacement of any defective material was to be on a prorated basis and labor costs were not included.

The fact that many of the witnesses nonetheless indicated overall satisfaction with the steel siding is not controlling. Evidence of actual deception is not necessarily essential to a finding of unfair and deceptive practices. It is the capacity to deceive which is important.

Double Eagle Lubricants, Incorporated v. F.T.C., 360 F.2d 268 (10th Cir. 1965). And as was said in F.T.C. v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 385, 85 S.Ct. 1035, 1042, 13 L.Ed.2d 904 (1965), "an administrative agency which deals continually with cases in the area * * * is often in a better position than are courts to determine when a practice is 'deceptive' within the meaning of the Act." In sum, the Commission's finding of unfair trade practices is in our view supported by substantial evidence.

As concerns Count 2 in the complaint, it is conceded that there had been violations of the Truth-in-Lending Act, and Regulation Z promulgated thereunder, though the petitioners contended the violations were unintentional, and quickly corrected when discovered.

[6-8] The petitioners alternatively argue that if the Commission's findings are deemed to be supported by substantial evidence, the remedial orders were overly broad and not warranted by the findings. The Commission of course has considerable latitude in fashioning an effective cease and desist order, once an unfair trade practice is found to exist. [181] All that is necessary is that the Commission's remedial orders have a "reasonable relation" to the unlawful practices found to exist. And an order should ordinarily not be modified or narrowed because of hypothetical situations where lawful conduct could conceivably be prohibited by the cease and desist order. In this regard, see F.T.C. v. National Lead Co., 352 U.S. 419, at 428-429, 431, 77 S.Ct. 502, at 509, 1 L.Ed.2d 438 (1957), where the following pertinent language appears:

> The Court has held that the Commission is clothed with wide discretion in determining the type of order that is necessary to bring an end to the unfair practices found to exist. In Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U.S. 608 [66 S.Ct. 758, 90 L.Ed. 888] (1946), the Court named the Commission "the expert body to determine what remedy is necessary to eliminate the unfair or deceptive trade practices which have been disclosed. It has wide latitude for judgment and the courts will not interfere except where the remedy selected has no reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist." Id., at 612-613, [66 S.Ct. 758 at page 760]. Thereafter, in Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 726 [68 S.Ct. 793, 815, 92 L.Ed. 1010] (1948), the Court pointed out that the Congress, in passing the Act, "felt that courts needed the assistance of men trained to combat monopolistic practices in the framing of judicial decrees in antitrust litigation." In the light of this, the Court reasoned, it should not 'lightly modify' the orders of the Commission. Again, in Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., supra, 343 U.S. at 473, we said that "if the Commission is to attain the objectives Congress envisioned, it cannot be required to confine its road block to the narrow lane the transgressor has traveled; it must be allowed effectively to close all roads to the prohibited goal, so that its order may not be by-passed with impunity." We pointed out there that Congress had placed the primary responsibility for fashioning orders upon the Commission. These cases narrow the issue to the question: Does the remedy selected have a "reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist"? * * *

> Respondents pose hypothetical situations which they say may rise up to plague them. However, 'we think it would not be good judicial administration,' as our late Brother Jackson said in International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 401 [68 S.Ct. 1217, 92 L.Ed. 20] (1947), to strike the contested paragraph of the order to meet such conjectures. The Commission has reserved jurisdiction to meet just such contingencies. As actual situations arise they can be presented to the Commission in evidentiary form rather than as fantasies. And, we might add, if there is a burden that cannot be made lighter after application to the Commission, then respondents must remember that those caught violating the Act must expect some fencing in. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, 323 U.S. at 187 [65 S.Ct. 254 at page 261].

We conclude, then, that the orders here involved do have a "reasonable relationship" to both the unfair trade practices and the violations of the Truth-in-Lending Act. The fact that the petitioners took corrective action to bring their sales contracts into line with the provisions of the Truth-in-Lending Act and, in effect, promised to sin no more, is not controlling. Cotherman v. F.T.C., 417 F.2d 587 (5th Cir. 1969).

[9,10] Claude Thiret contends that he should not be made subject to the cease and desist orders because he was himself only an employee of the two companies, and had no control over the salesmen who were the ones actually guilty of the unfair practices. We think that Claude Thiret's own testimony, which in our view was generally corroborated by the testimony of Michael Thiret, refutes this contention. As general manager, Claude Thiret did exercise a [182] degree of control over the salesmen. A command to a corporation is a command to those who are officially responsible for the conduct of its affairs. Trade Comm'n v. Education Society, 302 U.S. 112, 58 S.Ct. 113, 82 L.Ed. 141 (1937), and Wilson v. United States, 221 U.S. 361, 31 S.Ct. 538, 55 L.Ed. 771 (1911). And in our view the record supports the finding that Claude Thiret, as well as Michael Thiret, was in a command position.

Claude Thiret additionally argues that when he was dismissed from the proceedings before the Judge, he lost his right to thereafter participate in such proceedings and accordingly was precluded from putting on evidence as to his role in the conduct of the companies' affairs. This argument is highly speculative, at best. We are convinced that Thiret was not denied "his day" before either the Judge or the Commission. And, as above indicated, it was his own testimony which in our view supported the Commission's finding that he did have supervisory control over the salesmen.

Order affirmed.

1. FOR PREENFORCEMENT JURISDICTION PURPOSES, COURT MUST EVALUATE HARDSHIP OF COMPLIANCE AND HARDSHIP OF NONCOMPLIANCE WITH ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER: MATTER NOT RIPE IF EITHER IS MINIMAL AT THE TIME OF ADJUDICATION.

[*] Reported in 396 F.Supp. 1125 (1975). See also pp. 1205, 1474 herein.

[1126] In measuring ripeness for preenforcement jurisdiction purposes court must evaluate hardship of compliance and hardship of noncompliance with administrative order, and if either is minimal at the time of adjudication the matter will be held not ripe.

2. THE RISK OF CRIMINAL AND CIVIL SANCTIONS IS THE HARDSHIP OF NONCOMPLIANCE, NOT CHANCE THAT NO SANCTION WILL BE INVOKED.

Measuring ripeness for preenforcement jurisdiction purposes, hardship of noncompliance with administrative order is the risk of criminal and civil sanctions that controls rather than the chance that no sanctions will be invoked.

3. UNIMPORTANT CONSIDERATIONS IN DETERMINING RIPENESS FOR PURPOSE OF PREENFORCEMENT JURISDICTION INCLUDE PLAINTIFF'S ABILITY TO ASSERT DEFENSES OR LIKELIHOOD OF PREVAILING ON THE MERITS.

Issue of plaintiff's ability to assert all his defenses in an administrative order enforcement proceeding or the likelihood that plaintiff would prevail on the merits are unimportant considerations in determining ripeness for purpose of preenforcement jurisdiction.

4. COMPARISON OF COSTS OF COMPLIANCE IN TERMS OF PRE AND POSTENFORCEMENT TIME FRAMES IRRELEVANT: OPERATIVE CONSIDERATIONS ARE COST OF COMPLIANCE VIS-A-VIS COST OF NONCOMPLIANCE AT TIME OF RIPENESS DETERMINATION.

In determining ripeness for preenforcement purposes the operative considerations are cost of compliance with administrative order vis-a-vis cost of noncompliance at the time of ripeness determination, and comparison of costs of compliance in terms of pre and postenforcement time frames is irrelevant.

5. BURDEN OF COMPLIANCE WAS SUFFICIENTLY HEAVY TO SATISFY PREENFORCEMENT RIPENESS REQUIREMENTS EVEN THOUGH SOME PROGRESS TOWARD COMPLETION OF ROUGH DRAFTS OF FIRST REPORT HAD APPARENTLY BEEN MADE.

Even though some of the corporate plaintiffs, seeking to preliminarily enjoin enforcement of Federal Trade Commission order requiring filing of certain business reports by large corporations, had apparently made progress toward completion of a rough draft of a first line of business report to Commission, the burden of compliance yet remaining as to each plaintiff was sufficiently heavy to satisfy preenforcement ripeness requirements.

6. BURDEN IN SEEKING PREENFORCEMENT RELIEF IS TO SHOW BOTH RIPENESS OF CONTROVERSY BEFORE COURT AND ABSENCE OF CONGRESSIONAL INTENT TO DENY RELIEF.

Whenever plaintiffs seek what is arguably preenforcement relief with respect to administrative order, the burden is to show both the absence of a congressional intent to deny preenforcement relief and the ripeness of controversy before the court.

7. REASONABLE PROBABILITY OF SUCCESS; IRREPARABLE INJURY PENDENTE LITE; POSSIBILITY OF THIRD PARTY HARM AND PUBLIC INTEREST ARE MINIMUM GROUNDS FOR ISSUANCE OF PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION.

Issuance of preliminary injunction requires at the minimum a showing that the moving party has a reasonable probability of success on the merits and that it will suffer irreparable injury pendente lite if status quo is not maintained; in addition court must consider where relevant the possibility of harm to third parties from grant or denial of injunction as well as public interest.

8. FEDERAL REPORTS ACT REQUIRES ONLY THAT COMPTROLLER GENERAL EXAMINE BURDENSOMENESS OF PRODUCING INFORMATION AND THAT INFORMATION IS NOT AVAILABLE FROM ANOTHER FEDERAL SOURCE; IT DOES NOT ALLOW SOLICITATION OF COMMENTS FROM PUBLIC.

Review function placed on comptroller general by Federal Reports Act to approve all agency forms soliciting certain types of information is limited to only an examination of burdensomeness of producing the information requested and an assurance that the requested information is not available from another source within the federal government and does not contemplate plenary consideration of all issues of possible importance relating to desirability of reporting program or soundness of reporting methods utilized nor does it allow solicitation or receipt of comments from interested members of public.

9. APA'S RULE-MAKING PROVISION MERELY OUTLINES MINIMUM ESSENTIAL RIGHTS AND PROCEDURES; IT DOES NOT ENCROACH REGULATORY AGENCY'S SUBSTANTIVE NEEDS.

Imposition of the Administrative Procedure Act's rule-making requirements does not encroach on substantive needs of federal regulatory agencies and the rule-making provisions as well as other provisions of Act are merely an outline of minimum essential rights and procedures.

10. PLAINTIFFS DEMONSTRATED THAT APA RULE-MAKING PROCEDURES APPLIED TO IMPLEMENTATION OF F.T.C. LINE OF BUSINESS REPORTING PROGRAM AND ISSUANCE OF PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION WAS WARRANTED.

Uncomplied with rule-making procedures specified in the Administrative [1127] Procedure Act were tentatively shown to apply to the implementation of Federal Trade Commission line of business-reporting program so that the plaintiff corporations had demonstrated to court sufficient probability of success on the merits to warrant issue of preliminary injunction against Commission's enforcement of order requiring filing of such reports.

11. COURT HAS DISCRETION TO ALLOW AS MUCH DISCOVERY AS IT FEELS IS CONSISTENT WITH THE EXPEDITIOUS ADJUDICATION OF ISSUES BEFORE IT.

Court to which administrative order enforcement application is made has discretion to allow as much discovery as is consistent with need for expeditious adjudication of issues before it.

12. PLAINTIFFS' REMEDY WAS RENDERED INADEQUATE BY THE TENSIONS BETWEEN SPEEDY ADJUDICATION AND FAIRNESS TO INVESTIGATED PARTY.

It was the tension between speedy adjudication and fairness to investigated party which rendered plaintiffs' remedy by way of summary enforcement suit inadequate vis-a-vis plenary preenforcement proceedings to enjoin Federal Trade Commission order requiring line of business reports.

13. COURT MAY INVOKE EQUITABLE POWERS TO AFFORD DISCOVERY NEEDED WHERE PLAINTIFFS DEMONSTRATE LIKELIHOOD OF SUCCESS ON MERITS AND NEED PANOPLY OF DISCOVERY DEVICES ENVISIONED BY FEDERAL RULES.

Where plaintiffs are able to demonstrate a likelihood of success on merits and may need panoply of discovery devices envisioned by federal rules if they are ultimately to carry burden of persuasion, court may invoke its equitable powers to afford discovery needed in summary enforcement proceeding concerning administrative order.

14. WHERE DISCOVERY IS INADEQUATE AT LAW, COURT OF EQUITY MAY PROVIDE DISCOVERY AND CONCOMITANT RELIEF.

Court of equity may on proper application invoke its auxiliary jurisdiction to provide discovery and concomitant relief where discovery is inadequate at law; in proper cases this may include issuance of decree enjoining further proceedings at law in favor of removal of entire case to equity.

15. PLAINTIFFS WOULD SUFFER IMMEDIATE IRREPARABLE HARM WITHOUT INJUNCTION WHERE MANDAMUS PROCEEDING BY F.T.C. WAS NOT ADEQUATE VEHICLE FOR ADJUDICATION OF PLAINTIFFS' RIGHTS.

In view of the various considerations and the demonstrated need of plaintiff corporation for full discovery on several issues, mandamus proceeding contemplated by Federal Trade Commission was not an adequate vehicle for the adjudication of rights plaintiffs asserted in action to preliminarily enjoin enforcement of Federal Trade Commission order requiring line of business reports, so plaintiffs would suffer immediate irreparable injury unless injunction was issued.

16. DESPITE POSSIBILITY OF DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAM, THERE WAS NO SHOWING THAT PUBLIC INTEREST WOULD BE DISSERVED IF PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION WERE GRANTED.

There was no showing that the public interest would be disserved if preliminary injunction were granted in favor of seven large corporations enjoining enforcement of Federal Trade Commission order requiring line of business reports from large corporations despite arguments that issuance of injunction would delay implementation of program.

17. COURT DECLINED TO SUSPEND INJUNCTION ISSUED PENDING F.T.C.'S APPEAL THEREFROM.

Court, which issued preliminary injunction against enforcement of Federal Trade Commission order relating to line of business reporting with respect to plaintiff corporation, declined in absence of any additional facts bearing on merits of case to suspend the preliminary injunction issued pending the Commission's appeal therefrom.

18. FINAL TRIAL OF CASE ON MERITS IS NOT GENERALLY DELAYED BY DENIAL OR GRANT OF TEMPORARY INJUNCTION.

Generally, an appeal from denial or grant of temporary injunction should not ordinarily delay final trial of case on the merits.

19. WHERE ONLY CERTAINTY RESULTING FROM GRANT OF STAY WOULD BE A DELAY NO PARTY WISHED, IT WAS INAPPROPRIATE FOR COURT TO STAY ALL PROCEEDINGS PENDING APPEAL FROM GRANT OF TEMPORARY INJUNCTION.

It was inappropriate for court, which had previously granted temporary injunction against enforcement of Federal Trade Commission order requiring large corporations to file line of business reports pursuant to suit brought by one corporation and later issued a similar temporary injunction in suits brought by seven other corporations, to grant a stay of all proceedings pending appeals from grant of temporary injunction in either the first case or in the other cases where only certainty resulting from grant of stay would be to delay which none of parties wanted.

In seven separate actions to enjoin enforcement of order of F.T.C. requiring line of business reports, court held that (1) A.P.A. rule-making provisions were applicable to orders issued without compliance therewith; (2) enforcement would temporarily be enjoined; and (3) it would deny a stay of proceedings pending appeal from earlier injunction.

Temporary injunction granted in accordance with opinion.

OPINION AND ORDER

[1128] MURRAY M. SCHWARTZ, District Judge.

On February 19, 1975 this Court issued its opinion in A. O. Smith Corporation, et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, et al., Civil Action No. 75-15, wherein it denied defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction and granted plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction. That case involves a suit by seven corporations seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against the Federal Trade Commission ("Commission" or "FTC"), its chairman and each commissioner separately, and the Comptroller General of the United States. The suit challenges the validity of an order promulgated by the Commission requiring the plaintiffs there, along with 338 other large corporations, to file annual line-of-business reports ("LB Reports").

Thereafter, an additional seven separate but nearly identical actions were filed by seven other corporations.[1]

This opinion treats two motions arising from the preliminary injunction previously issued in A. O. Smith Corporation, et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, et al.[2] ("Smith" or "A. O. Smith"), plaintiffs'[3] motions for preliminary injunction in seven unconsolidated civil actions all seeking relief identical to that granted in A. O. Smith, and the motion of defendant, Federal Trade Commission, to dismiss, or in the alternative, to trans[1129]fer the seven actions to the Southern District of New York.

[1] At oral argument on March 13, 1975, the Court was advised all but 10 of the 345 corporations ordered to file LB Reports have either filed or are engaged in litigation revolving about the requirement of filing the report. As of March 13, 1975, 220 corporations had filed LB Reports. One hundred two corporations are engaged in pre-enforcement litigation in the Southern District of New York or the District of Delaware, while the FTC was actively pursuing 110 enforcement proceedings in the Southern District of New York.

[2] Civil Action No. 75-15 Opinion and Order dated February 19, 1975. The Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law in A. O. Smith Corporation, et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, et al. to the extent they are not inconsistent with those in the instant opinion are herein incorporated by reference and made a part hereof and made applicable to all the plaintiffs captioned herein. See D.C., 396 F.Supp. 1108.

[3] The respective lawsuits wherein the FTC and its commissioners are defendants are as follows: Inland Steel Company, Civil Action No. 75-45; Northwest Industries, Inc., Civil No. 75-46; Oscar Mayer & Co., Inc., Civil Action No. 75-47; Merck & Co., Inc., Civil Action No. 75-48; Hobart Corporation, Civil Action No. 75-49; The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Civil Action No. 75-50; Thomas J. Lipton, Inc., Civil Action No. 75-56.

The varied motions[4] will be considered separately.

I. DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS DIRECTED TO THE SEVEN ADDITIONAL COMPLAINTS

Defendants have filed motions to dismiss the seven separate but nearly identical actions brought by seven additional corporations against the same defendants as in the A. O. Smith case.

A. Background

These seven plaintiffs are among the 345 corporations subject to the Commission's Line-of-Business order. Most of the background facts pertinent to these actions are identical to those cited in the A. O. Smith opinion D.C., 396 F.Supp. 1108 at pp. 1111-1112. In addition, nearly all of the record in that proceeding has been introduced into the record of each of these cases. There are, however, some differences in the facts incident to these plaintiffs which, according to the FTC, require a different outcome than that reached in the A. O. Smith opinion.

In A. O. Smith, no Commission enforcement proceeding, per 15 U.S.C. § 49, as amended, had been applied for prior to the time suit was filed in this Court. As to the seven new plaintiffs the following facts apply. On February 11, 1975, a district judge of the Southern District of New York signed a show cause order directed to Thomas J. Lipton, Inc. ("Lipton"), among others, concerning compliance with the Commission's order. By its own terms this show cause order was to be served upon Lipton by February 21, 1975.[5] This order, docketed on February 21, 1975,[6] was not served upon Lipton by February 21 and had not been served by February 26, 1975.[7] Lipton filed suit in this district on February 24, 1975.

Six of the seven actions herein involved (Civil Action Nos. 75-45 to 75-50) were filed with this Court on February 14, 1975. On February 20, 1975, Judge Weinfeld issued another order to show cause, at the request of the Commission, to 95 additional companies then due to file reports. By its terms service was to be made by March 4, 1975. This latter order was directed to the other six plaintiffs in these actions. It was filed with the Docket Clerk of the Southern District of New York Court on March 7, 1975.[8] Service had not been perfected as to any of these six plaintiffs by February 26, 1975.

[4] Plaintiffs have withdrawn a motion to intervene in the Smith litigation following waiver of a venue defense by the FTC. Motions of certain of the additional seven plaintiffs to consolidate and an intervention motion by Thomas J. Lipton, Inc. are in limbo not having been pursued at the March 13, 1975 preliminary injunction hearing. The FTC has also advised it did not wish to pursue its alternative motion to transfer if a preliminary injunction should issue with respect to the seven additional plaintiffs.

On February 26, 1975 this Court issued a temporary restraining order preventing the Commission from taking any further action toward enforcement of its order, including any service of show cause orders, with respect to the seven plaintiffs involved in these actions. A hearing was held on March 13 on plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction. The timing of the issuance of this opinion is controlled by the expiration of the Temporary Restraining Order on March 18, 1975, the parties having been unable to agree to an extension. As a result, the Court has had no opportunity to review a forthcoming transcript of the March 13 hearing.

B. Ripeness

[1130] Following the order in which the issues were treated in the A. O. Smith opinion, the first challenge posed by the defendants to the conclusions reached therein goes to the absence of hardship to these plaintiffs, hence, the lack of ripeness, as that concept is discussed in the Abbott Labs trilogy.[9]

First, defendants need not worry that this Court finds hardship here based upon grounds which it could not accept in A. O. Smith. Specifically, the risk that data obtained through the LB Program will mislead the public and thereby redound to the detriment of complying corporations is a factor too speculative to be considered here.[10]

Defendants in their brief next examine the hardship of noncompliance and reassert that as to any enforcement proceeding brought by the Commission all claims and defenses asserted in this preenforcement action could be asserted in an enforcement action. Assuming the truth of this argument and ignoring the possible unavailability of discovery so as to effectively prevent the assertion of defenses (see infra p. 1134), the Court deems it irrelevant to a discussion of hardship for purposes of establishing ripeness. Similarly irrelevant is the fact that, upon receiving a notice of default, plaintiffs could seek a stay of the accrual of penalties.

[1] In measuring ripeness, the Supreme Court in the Abbott Labs trilogy said that for pre-enforcement jurisdiction purposes, a Court must evaluate the hardship of compliance and the hardship of non-compliance. If either is minimal at the time of adjudication, the matter will be held not ripe.[11]

[2,3] The hardship of non-compliance is the risk of criminal and civil sanctions, not the chance that no sanctions will be invoked, that controls. For this reason, the issue of plaintiff's ability to fully assert all his defenses in an enforcement proceeding or the likelihood that plaintiff would prevail on the merits are unimportant considerations in determining ripeness. Thus, defendants' reference to cases such as Reisman v. Caplin[12] and Federal Trade Commission v. Claire Furnace Co.[13] completely misconstrues the important distinction between testing hardship for purposes of ripeness and testing the adequacy of some other remedy for purposes of exercising vel non a court's discretionary equitable jurisdiction.[14]

[4] Defendants next promote the argument that plaintiff's burden of compliance will be the same and no greater if and when an enforcement proceeding determines they must submit the LB Report, as it would be if compliance were engaged in voluntarily at this time. The answers to this argument are two[1131]fold: (1) In determining ripeness for pre-enforcement purposes, the operative considerations are cost of compliance vis-a-vis cost of non-compliance at the time of the ripeness determination. Comparing costs of compliance in terms of pre- and post-enforcement time frames is irrelevant; (2) if defendants' argument were accepted, pre-enforcement relief would nearly always be denied, and the Court would be forced to conclude that the Abbott Laboratories case was wrongly decided.

[5] Some of these plaintiffs have apparently made progress toward completion of a rough first draft of an LB Report to the Commission.[15] However, this Court finds that the burdens of compliance yet remaining as to each plaintiff is sufficiently heavy to satisfy ripeness requirements.

All prior discussion in this section assumes the propriety of applying the tests set forth in the Abbott Labs trilogy, a position which defendants supported in A. O. Smith.[16] Defendants in this action, however, urge this Court to consider the line of cases commencing with Federal Trade Commission v. Claire Furnace Co.[17] and extending through St. Regis Paper Co. v. United States,[18] Reisman v. Caplin,[19] and Donaldson v. United States.[20] A careful reading of these cases compels a conclusion that ripeness was not treated. As such, these cases are more appropriately discussed in the forthcoming section considering the grounds for granting the requested preliminary relief.

[11] It was suggested by a party at oral argument that the test set forth in Abbott Laboratories was a disjunctive test and not a conjunctive test, so that the presence of either hardship in sufficient degree would satisfy ripeness. For reasons cited in the text above, this Court is inclined to interpret the language of those cases as setting forth a conjunctive test. Thus, in General Motors v. Volpe, 321 F.Supp. 1112 (D.Del.1970), aff'd as modified, 457 F.2d 922 (3d Cir. 1972), assuming Chief Judge Wright intended to find in the alternative an absence of hardship sufficient to render that case ripe, his decision can be more easily understood not in terms of the $400,000 penalty that General Motors risked by non-compliance, but by the choice of compliance, the direct costs of which would have been mere postage.

[6] The Abbott Labs trilogy makes it no easier for plaintiffs to maintain suit for pre-enforcement relief than the above-referenced line of cases upon which defendants now rely. In fact, the Abbott Labs trilogy imposes an additional burden upon plaintiffs whenever, as here, they seek what is arguably "pre-enforcement" relief. That burden, which is to show both the absence of a Congressional intent to deny pre-enforcement relief and the ripeness of the controversy before the Court, has been met for the same reasons here as detailed in A. O. Smith.

II. THE SEVEN ADDITIONAL PLAINTIFFS' MOTIONS FOR ISSUANCE OF A PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

[7] The issuance of a preliminary injunction requires, at a minimum, two showings: (1) that the moving party has a reasonable probability of success on the merits; and (2) that it will suffer irreparable injury pendente lite if the status quo is not maintained. Delaware River Port Authority v. Transamerican Trailer Transport, Inc., 501 F.2d 917, 919-20 (3d Cir. 1974). In addition, the Court must consider, where relevant, the possibility of harm to third parties which would attend a grant or denial of the injunction as well as the public interest. Id. at 920.

In A. O. Smith, this Court had occasion to consider each of the foregoing factors as they applied to a factual situation not dissimilar from that now before it. Therein, the Court found that plaintiffs had demonstrated a likelihood of eventual success and irreparable injury, and that the interests of specific third parties as well as those of the public at large would not be disserved if the injunction were to issue. Defendants suggest a different result is compelled in the cases at bar, based upon a re-exami[1132]nation of the applicable law as well as a change in circumstances between the A. O. Smith plaintiffs and those at bar. For the reasons articulated below, the Court must disagree.

A. Probability of Success on the Merits

Defendants argue that the Court erred in A. O. Smith in suggesting the applicability of APA rulemaking procedures to the adoption of the Line-of-Business Reporting Program. They principally contend that imposition of rulemaking procedures is inconsistent with the provisions of the Federal Reports Act,[21] which require that the Comptroller General review and approve all agency forms soliciting information of the type required by the LB Program. Defendants collaterally assert that the Federal Reports Act invests broad investigatory powers in the FTC and that the rule-making strictures of the APA constitute an unnecessary encroachment upon those powers.

> The rule-making procedure performs important functions. It gives notice to an entire segment of society of those controls or regimentation that is forthcoming. It gives an opportunity for persons affected to be heard. . . .
> . . . Agencies discover that they are not always repositories of ultimate wisdom; they learn from the suggestions of outsiders and often benefit from that advice. See H. Friendly, The Federal Administrative Agencies 45 (1962).
> This is a healthy process that helps make a society viable. The multiplication of agencies and their growing power make them more and more remote from the people affected by what they do and make more likely the arbitrary exercise of their powers. Public airing of problems through rule making makes the bureaucracy more responsive to public needs and is an important brake on the growth of absolutism . . . .

[8] The review functions vested in the Comptroller General pursuant to 44 U.S.C. § 3512 (Supp.1975) necessarily fail to fulfill these purposes. The Comptroller General's scope of review is limited; it extends only to an examination of the burdensomeness of producing the information requested and assurance that requested information is not available from another source within the federal government. The provision does not contemplate plenary consideration of all issues of possible importance relating to the desirability of a reporting program or the soundness of the reporting methods utilized nor does it allow solicitation or receipt of comments from interested members of the public.[22] Indeed, the period of time in which the GAO must consider a proposal and report back—45 days—would necessarily obviate any extended evaluation of a proposed reporting program.[23]

[22] It is noteworthy that the Federal Reports Act, prior to its amendment in 1973, did indeed vest plenary review authority over agency information gathering programs in the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. This included authority to pass upon the necessity of a program for any proper purpose and to solicit the views of interested members of the public. 44 U.S.C. § 3506 as amended, 44 U.S.C. § 3512 (Supp.1975). A reading of the legislative history of the 1973 amendment suggests that its purpose was to delimit much of this review authority in that it had become an obstruction to data collection programs proposed by federal regulatory agencies. See House Conference Rep.No.93-924, 93d Cong., 1st Sess. (1973), 1973 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News pp. 2533-2534; 119 Cong.Rec. S13441-47 (1973).

procedures encroaches upon the FTC's broad investigatory powers is equally without merit. The Federal Trade Commission Act as well as 44 U.S.C. § 3512 confer far-reaching authority upon the FTC to request and collect information; the power of the courts to pass upon the propriety of such requests is accordingly limited. See United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 70 S.Ct. 357, 94 L.Ed. 401 (1950). However, the imposition of the APA's rulemaking requirements does not, nor was it intended to, encroach upon the substantive needs of the federal regulatory agencies. The rulemaking provisions, as well as other provisions of the APA, are merely an outline of minimum essential rights and procedures. See House Rep.No.1980, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., 1946 U.S.Code Cong. Service pp. 1204-1205. Of course, these procedures may give rise to some administrative inconvenience, yet Congress envisioned this possibility and provided that the Act should nevertheless be fully operative according to its terms. Id. at 1204.

Defendants seek to divine further evidence of a Congressional intent to wholly exempt information-gathering programs from the APA's rulemaking regime in that Congress failed to mention investigations in the rulemaking section of that Act. 5 U.S.C. § 553. Instead, defendants assert that investigational matters were treated separately in 5 U.S.C. § 555(c) ("Ancillary Matters"). Section 553, however, purports only to describe the procedures which must be followed in the implementation of agency rules; it does not define "rule" or "rulemaking," nor does it constitute a catalogue of instances in which rulemaking procedures must be followed.[24] Neither is Section 555 indicative of the Congressional intent defendants suggest. As plaintiffs correctly observe, the ancillary matters described in that section, including investigations, are not a new category of substantive authority to which neither rulemaking nor adjudicatory procedures apply. "Section 6 [5 U.S.C. § 555] prescribes the rights of private parties in a number of miscellaneous respects which may be incidental to rulemaking, adjudication, or the exercise of any other agency authority."[25] The procedural requirements specified in Section 555(c) and (d) do not conflict with those specified in Section 553. The Court cannot hold Congress intended in Section 555 to obviate the applicability of all other procedural provisions of the APA.

[10] For the foregoing reasons, as well as those articulated in the Court's opinion in A. O. Smith, the Court affirms its earlier conclusion appropriations) exercises con[1133]trol over broad economic investigations which the FTC seeks to implement. However, it is doubtful that Congress is in a position to closely scrutinize and offer constructive comments on all such programs, a result which rulemaking procedures are designed to promote. Moreover, termination of Congressional funding for abortive economics reporting programs is a step which occurs only after the faults of the program become evident. Ideally, the opportunity for public comment in rulemaking proceedings should highlight the difficulties of such a program at its inception.

[24] The definition of "rule" and "rulemaking" together with examples are contained in 5 U.S.C. §§ 551(4) and (5).

[25] House Rep.No.1980, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., 1946 U.S.Code Cong. Service p. 1206.

that the rulemaking procedures specified in the APA tentatively apply to the implementation of the FTC's LB Program. Accordingly, the Court finds that the seven plaintiffs now before it have demonstrated the requisite probability of success on the merits to warrant the issuance of a preliminary injunction.

B. Irreparable Injury

The seven additional corporate plaintiffs in their seven separate but nearly identical actions challenge the validity of the same FTC order, upon the same legal grounds and seek virtually the same ultimate declaratory and injunctive relief as that sought in A. O. Smith. Defend[1134]ants urge that the circumstances surrounding these plaintiffs differ from those in the A. O. Smith case because the Commission has taken legal steps aimed toward enforcing its Order in the Southern District of New York as against each plaintiff. Plaintiffs challenge whether those proceedings were validly instituted, a point this Court does not address. As to six of the plaintiffs the service of orders to show cause was apparently interrupted by this Court's granting of a TRO. As to the seventh plaintiff, Lipton, the time for service of the order to show cause apparently expired by its own terms prior to the granting of the TRO. Regardless of the present status of these orders, it may be fairly assumed that were the TRO to be lifted enforcement proceedings would very shortly be pending against all seven plaintiffs in the Southern District of New York. The relief here requested would enjoin the Commission from taking further enforcement steps in the Southern District of New York.[26]

Defendants correctly stress that the conclusion concerning the lack of adequate alternative remedy in A. O. Smith was predicated upon two grounds: (1) the absence of pending enforcement proceedings; and (2) the inadequacy of such proceedings for purposes of conducting needed discovery so as to be able to fully and adequately assert defenses. The first ground is arguably irrelevant with respect to the plaintiffs now before the Court; at the time the TRO issued, the institution of enforcement proceedings in New York against these seven corporations was a virtual certainty.[27] The difficulties posed by the second ground, however, are undiminished.

Enforcement by mandamus is an action quite distinguished from the usual civil action.[28] It appears relatively infrequently in the U. S. Code.[29] "Its purpose is to enforce rights already established, rather than to establish or declare the rights of the parties."[30] Because of the summary nature of mandamus proceedings, procedural rights normally associated with plenary civil actions may be curtailed.[31] This is particularly true with respect to the use of discovery devices. See United States v. Associated Merchandising Corp., 256 F.Supp. 318 (S.D.N.Y.1966).

[26] A grant of such relief must always be accompanied by a finding of reasonable probability of success on the merits, an adequate safeguard against a "gutting" of the Commission's procedures for enforcement.

[27] Defendants' Memorandum in Support of Their Motion to Dismiss, Civil Action No. 75-46, Docket No. 10 at 6.

[28] 52 AmJur2d Mandamus §§ 1-11 (2d ed. 1970).

[29] 7 Moore's Federal Practice ¶ 81.01[11] at 81-26 to 81-27 (1974 ed).

[11] Defendants correctly point out that the availability of discovery in summary enforcement proceedings is not categorically foreclosed to either party. Rather, the court to which enforcement application is made has discretion to allow as much discovery as is consistent with the need for expeditious adjudication of the issues before it. See FTC v. Kujawski, 298 F.Supp. 1288, 1290 (N. D.Ga.1969); cf. Venn v. United States, 400 F.2d 207, 212 n. 12 (5th Cir. 1968); United States v. Moriarity, 278 F.Supp. 187 (E.D.Wis.1967). This, however, introduces an element into a court's decision to allow discovery in a summary enforcement context which is not present in a plenary pre-enforcement action, i.e., the "tension between speedy adjudication and fairness to the investigated party." FTC v. Kujawski, 298 F.Supp. at 1290.[32]

[1135] [12] In the Court's view, it is this tension which renders plaintiffs' remedy by way of summary enforcement suit inadequate vis-a-vis plenary pre-enforcement proceedings. In the context of a summary enforcement suit in which a prompt determination of the need for compliance with an administrative order is demanded, a court may be understandably ill-disposed to grant requests for discovery which would be otherwise permissible in a plenary civil action. See, e. g., United States v. Associated Merchandising Corp., 256 F.Supp. 318 (S.D.N.Y.1966).

[13,14] This is not to say that a pre-enforcement injunction may issue in every instance in which there appears the possibility that discovery in a pending enforcement proceeding may be limited. Where, as here, however, plaintiffs are able to demonstrate a likelihood of success on the merits and may need the panoply of discovery devices envisioned by the Federal Rules if they are ultimately to carry the burden of persuasion, this Court may invoke its equitable powers[33] to afford the discovery needed.

[31] Cf. Donaldson v. United States, 400 U.S. 517, 528-29 & n. 11, 91 S.Ct. 534, 27 L.Ed.2d 580 (1971); United States v. Howard, 360 F.2d 373 (3d Cir. 1966); FTC v. Kujawski, 298 F.Supp. 1288, 1290 (N.D.Ga.1969).

[32] Indeed, it appears that this tension is already present; the Commission has made clear its intent to press for limited discovery in the enforcement suits which are now pending against other plaintiffs in the Southern District of New York. See Defendants' Mem[1135]orandum in Support of Their Motion to Dismiss, Civil Action No. 75-46, Docket No. 10 at 24-25 and A. O. Smith, et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, et al., Civil Action No. 75-15, Defendants' Memorandum in Support of a Motion for Protective Order at 3-15.

[33] It is well-settled that a court of equity may, upon proper application, invoke its auxiliary jurisdiction to provide discovery and concomitant relief where discovery is inadequate at law. In proper cases this may include issuance of a decree enjoining further proceedings at law in favor of removal of the entire case to equity. 1 J. Pomeroy, A Treatise on Equity Jurisprudence § 197a, at 296-97 & n. 17 (1941). See generally id. §§ 191-215, at 275-365.

[15] Given the foregoing considerations and in view of plaintiffs' demonstrated need for full discovery on several issues,[34] the Court reiterates that the mandamus proceedings contemplated by the Commission are not an adequate vehicle for the adjudication of rights plaintiffs here assert.[35] Accordingly, for the applicable reasons set forth in A. O. Smith, at 1117-1118, and as amplified above, the Court concludes plaintiffs will suffer immediate irreparable injury.

C. . Public Interest

[16] In A. O. Smith, the Court concluded that the public interest would not be disserved if a preliminary injunction were issued in favor of the seven moving plaintiffs. Defendants here renew this argument contending that de[1136]lay in the implementation of the program with respect to the seven new plaintiffs will render useless the efforts of the Commission as well as the corporations having already submitted reports. Defendants additionally argue that issuance of an injunction will impede their efforts to consolidate and resolve all actions relating to the LB Program in a single forum.[36]

For the reasons set forth in A. O. Smith and the facts previously alluded to,[37] the Court does not find defendants' first argument persuasive. Defendants' second argument, while possessed of some merit, is more properly the subject of a motion pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404 (a). At this juncture, such a motion is not before the Court.[38]

It may also be argued that Claire Furnace was decided on alternative grounds, specifically, the existence of a Congressional intent to minimize the judicial burden which such actions placed upon the courts and prospective enforcement defendants through a statutory scheme requiring the Attorney General to screen Commission requests for enforcement relief in the courts. See 15 U.S.C. § 49. This statute has recently been amended to permit the Commission to bring its own actions; therefore, the prior implied Congressional concern for burdening the courts and enforcement defendants with suits involving Commission orders has faded with the passage of time. See 15 U.S.C.A. § 56(a) (1975).

Finally, language utilized by the Supreme Court in Claire Furnace would seem to indicate that the Court envisioned the applicability of all procedural incidents of a plenary proceeding in an enforcement action. See 274 U.S. at 174, 47 S.Ct. at 556 ("If, exercising his discretion, [the Attorney General] had instituted either proceeding, the defendant therein would have been fully heard, and could have adequately and effectively presented every ground of objection sought to be presented now."). The law has nonetheless developed in a different manner. See discussion supra, pp. 1134-1135.

[36] Defendants do not argue that the rights of any specific third parties will be impaired by the issuance of the requested injunction. See Delaware River Port Authority v. Transamerican Trailer Transport, Inc., 501 F.2d 917, 920 (3d Cir. 1974).

[37] See note 1, supra.

[38] Defendants requested withdrawal of pending transfer motions in each of the seven actions in the event the Court granted the respective plaintiffs' motions for preliminary injunction.

III. THE FTC MOTION TO SUSPEND THE PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION ISSUED IN THE A. O. Smith CASE.

[17] The February 19, 1975 preliminary injunction granted to preserve the status quo was accompanied by an Opinion. In that Opinion the Court found that plaintiffs were entitled to the grant of a preliminary injunction in view of their reasonable probability of success on the merits of Count III of their complaint which alleges that the Commission, in promulgation of the LB Program, has violated the rulemaking provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. § 553). (At 1121-1125) This Court also concluded that plaintiffs would suffer immediate, irreparable injury absent the grant of a preliminary injunction (At 1117-1118); that "the possibility of harm to other interested persons from the grant or denial of the injunction is nonexistent or at best speculative" (At 1118); and that it could not be said that the public interest would be harmed by the issuance of an injunction and, indeed, that the public interest may benefit from the grant of a preliminary injunction (At 1118-1119).[39]

On February 26, 1975, the FTC appealed the grant of the preliminary injunction as well as this Court's denial of its Motion to Dismiss. On March 3, 1975 it filed pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 62(c)[40] its motions seeking a suspension of the injunction and stay of all proceedings pending appeal. The FTC has not placed in the record any additional facts bearing upon the merits of the A. O. Smith case. Instead it argues the Court erred in its findings of pre-enforcement jurisdiction because of the emphasis placed upon the Abbott Labs trilogy.[41] The Commission urges "[t]he Supreme Court has consistently declined to permit pre-enforcement review of investigational orders or subpoenas issued by administrative agencies where persons seeking the review are assured a proper hearing of any good faith defenses in an enforcement proceeding, and, absent the initiation of the enforcement proceeding, the agency is without power to compel compliance with the order or subpoena. [1137] Donaldson v. United States, 400 U.S. 517, 91 S.Ct. 534, 27 L.Ed.2d 580 (1970); Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440, 84 S.Ct. 508, 11 L.Ed.2d 459 (1964); St. Regis Paper Co. v. United States, 368 U.S. 208, 225-227, 82 S.Ct. 289, 7 L.Ed.2d 240 (1961); Federal Trade Commission v. Claire Furnace Co., 274 U.S. 160, 174, 47 S.Ct. 553, 71 L.Ed. 978 (1927)." It is noted that at oral argument on the hearing for preliminary injunction in A. O. Smith, counsel for the FTC asserted that the Abbott Labs trilogy controlled,[42] only briefly mentioning some of the other cases upon which the FTC now presses this Court to consider and rely. The Court, in any event, declines to reach the result urged by the Commission, for reasons set out supra at 1131, 1135 & note 34.

[40] (c) Injunction Pending Appeal. When an appeal is taken from an interlocutory or final judgment granting, dissolving, or denying an injunction, the court in its discretion may suspend, modify, restore, or grant an injunction during the pendency of the appeal upon such terms as to bond or otherwise as it considers proper for the security of the rights of the adverse party. . . .

[41] Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, supra; Toilet Goods Association v. Gardner, supra; Gardner v. Toilet Goods Association, supra.

The FTC also urges this Court erred in its finding of likelihood of success based upon the admitted failure of the FTC to follow the APA. The Court disagrees for reasons more fully set forth supra at 1131-1132.

In summary, the Court reaffirms its views expressed on February 19, 1975; the A. O. Smith plaintiffs and the seven additional plaintiffs have a sufficient probability of success on the merits of Count III of their complaint to warrant the grant of a preliminary injunction; the plaintiffs would be irreparably injured absent the grant of a preliminary injunction; the possibility of harm to other interested persons is "nonexistent or at best speculative"; and the public interest will not be harmed by the grant of a preliminary injunction.[43]

If the FTC were to be granted a suspension of the preliminary injunction pending appeal, it candidly conceded at oral argument it would initiate a summary enforcement proceeding against all plaintiffs. That action would disrupt the status quo pending appeal thereby permitting, inter alia, the irreparable injury the preliminary injunction was designed to prevent. See 7 Moore's Federal Practice ¶ 62.05, at 62-25 to 62-26 (1974). This result cannot be permitted. The FTC's motion for suspension of the preliminary injunction will be denied.

IV. DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO STAY ALL PROCEEDINGS PENDING APPEAL[44]

The Commission urges this Court to stay all proceedings pending appeal in the A. O. Smith case and in the seven new cases, assuming this Court denies its motion to dismiss and grants plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction in each of the seven additional cases. The Commission states it intends to appeal from both decisions,[45] and thus seek review of this Court's jurisdiction over these proceedings. In view of the appeals, the Commission urges it would be an appropriate exercise of this Court's discretion to await a decision by the Court of Appeals in A. O. Smith and, assumedly, the seven additional cases, before permitting further proceedings in any of them.

Apparently there is no dispute that the nature of defendants' appeal is interlocutory and that this Court retains jurisdiction and responsibility over all those phases of the case which have not been decided.[46]

[43] At 1118-1119, 1124.

[44] At a March 13, 1975 hearing on preliminary injunction, counsel for the FTC requested that its motion for stay of all proceedings be deemed applicable to the seven actions filed subsequent to A. O. Smith if a preliminary injunction should issue in those actions, as well as the A. O. Smith case itself.

[45] Defendants rely upon Deckert v. Independence Shares Corp., 311 U.S. 282, 61 S.Ct. 229, 85 L.Ed. 189 (1941).

[18] This Court does not agree that merely because the issue of jurisdiction may be addressed on appeal, it is neces[1138]sarily appropriate to stay further proceedings before it. The general rule is that "an appeal from the denial or granting of a temporary injunction should not ordinarily delay the final trial of the case on its merits."[47]

[19] The Commission also argues that this Court should stay proceedings to avoid the costs and hardship to all the parties resulting from a multiplicity of actions. First, no plaintiff in these cases has yet come forward to complain of any such hardship. In fact, A. O. Smith has filed a brief opposing the grant of any stay.[48] It is therefore concluded this argument is addressed solely to the hardship of the Commission in cases in which it is a defendant. Where the FTC is the proponent of the action, it apparently regards its hardship as tolerable, since it not only has not moved for a stay but is instead filing and vigorously pursuing enforcement actions. Second, a closer examination of the alleged hardship exposes certain weaknesses in the position.

For example, the Commission requests relief from the necessity to "[litigate] simultaneously identical issues before separate fora."[49] Surely the FTC does not refer to the separate actions of the A. O. Smith proceeding and that of the seven new actions, for by appealing the Court's decisions in the latter cases, the FTC will assure that virtually identical issues will be presented to the Third Circuit in all cases, with the strong likelihood of their being consolidated for argument. Still another reason convinces the Court that FTC is unconcerned over litigating identical issues in A. O. Smith and the other seven cases. At the start of the March 13 hearing on all of these pending motions the Court inquired of FTC as to its willingness to agree to a stay in the seven cases, with the TRO remaining in effect, pending the outcome of the appeal in A. O. Smith. The FTC responded it would not agree to a stay except upon terms which would have destroyed the status quo.

If, alternatively, the Commission is referring to the separate fora of the Southern District of New York and of Delaware, it would appear that the motion to stay, if at all appropriate, is being urged in the wrong district court. For as it stands now the Commission must argue the identical issues in the Southern District of New York that are now beyond this Court's jurisdiction and before the Third Circuit Court of Appeals.

[49] Civil Action No. 75-49, Reply Memorandum of Commission, Docket No. 18, p. 4.

It may be that the Commission's concern is centered not on the few issues now on appeal but rather all the other issues that still remain within this Court's jurisdiction. As to these, however, a stay would only postpone the time when the Commission must litigate those issues before this Court. Even if the Third Circuit were to decide contrary to this Court's holdings, it is impossible at this time to know on what ground such a reversal might occur. Barring reversal on jurisdictional grounds, discovery and disposition by motion or trial as to all issues raised on the merits will inevitably have to occur.

Thus by far the only certainty resulting from the grant of a stay would be delay to all parties. Neither side wants delay. The plaintiffs have a right to a speedy determination of their cause of action. They have a right to question witnesses who, while available now, may be unavailable at some later point in time.[50] Furthermore, if required soon by order of the Commission to commence [1139] preparation of LB Reports for fiscal year 1974, plaintiffs have a strong interest in knowing whether such orders must be obeyed.

As to the defendants, the Commission has left a deep impression upon this Court that the FTC seeks as speedy a resolution of these issues as possible. Several actions taken by the Commission lead the Court to this inexorable conclusion:

(1) The Commission issued its "Order to File Special Report" on August 2, 1974, requiring 345 companies to complete and submit reports within roughly 150 days. The Commission then took until January 7, 1975 to dispose of all the various motions to quash the order which were filed, yet it did not toll the 150 day deadline. Eventually, as to certain of the corporations, an additional 30 days was granted.

(2) At a hearing on the preliminary injunction and dismissal motions in the A. O. Smith case held February 5, 1975, this Court inquired as to whether the FTC would be willing to forego initiating enforcement proceedings against the plaintiffs in that action for a period of 30 days to permit the Court to give full consideration to all the issues raised at the hearing. The FTC advised it could wait to enforce only fourteen days or until February 20, 1975. February 20, 1975 was the earliest date enforcement proceedings could first be begun as to all the plaintiffs in the A. O. Smith case.

(3) At a February 26, 1975 hearing originally intended as a scheduling conference in the A. O. Smith case, all counsel including the Commission agreed to file certain motions requesting suspension of the injunction and stay of all proceedings by March 7, with hearing set for March 13. On February 27, 1975 the FTC made an ex parte telephone application to the Court to present and argue these unfiled motions on the following day, February 28. The Court denied this application. A similar attempt to present the motions at a previously set hearing on an FTC application for a protective order on March 3, 1975 was turned back by the Court when the plaintiffs made clear their preference to litigate issues according to the original schedule.

[50] Plaintiffs thus far have sought to depose one individual, an employee of the Commission, and the Court was immediately informed that he might soon be departed from the Commission and presumably his whereabouts unknown. A. O. Smith Corporation, et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, et al., 396 F.Supp. 1108, Affidavit of Frederic M. Scherer, Docket No. 31.

(4) At the Thursday, March 13, 1975 hearing on all of these motions the Court took note of the very tight brief schedule[51] and noted that plaintiffs felt the TRO in the seven new cases would expire on March 18 unless the FTC agreed to an extension. In view of the Commission's allegations that several facts meaningfully distinguished these cases from that of A. O. Smith, the Court invited the FTC's consent to an extension of the TRO to permit this Court time to both give full consideration to the arguments presented and reduce the same to opinion form. The FTC declined to consent.

In summary, the actions of the FTC leave no doubt that a speedy resolution of these issues is viewed by the Commission as being paramount, overriding at times the burdens imposed on all other parties and branches of government.

For all the foregoing reasons this Court finds it inappropriate to grant a stay of proceedings pending appeal in either A. O. Smith or the seven other cases.

ORDER

[1140] It is ordered and adjudged that:

(1) Defendants, their agents, officers, servants, and employees, and all persons in active concert or participation with them are herewith enjoined and restrained during the pendency of this litigation and until further order of this Court from:

(a) Giving notice of default to plaintiffs Inland Steel Company, Northwest Industries, Inc., Oscar Mayer & Co. Inc., Merck & Co., Inc., Hobart Corporation, The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company and Thomas J. Lipton, Inc., for failure to file Form LB as required by the resolution of the Federal Trade Commission dated August 2, 1974, and its special orders entered pursuant thereto; and

(b) Enforcement of or causing to be enforced civil penalties and all other forms of judicial and administrative relief, including but not limited to mandamus, for plaintiffs', Inland Steel Company, Northwest Industries, Inc., Oscar Mayer & Co., Inc., Merck & Co., Inc., Hobart Corporation, The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company and Thomas J. Lipton, Inc., failure to file the aforesaid Form LB.

(2) Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs', Inland Steel Company, Northwest Industries, Inc., Oscar Mayer & Co., Inc., Merck & Co., Inc., Hobart Corporation, The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company and Thomas J. Lipton, Inc., complaint for want of jurisdiction is herewith denied.

[51] Simultaneous exchange of briefs on March 7 and March 11, 1975.

(3) Defendants' motion to suspend the preliminary injunction issued February 19, 1975 in Civil Action No. 75-15 is denied.

(4) Defendants' motion to stay all proceedings pending appeal in Civil Action No. 75-15 is denied.

(5) Defendants' motion to suspend the preliminary injunction issued on March 18, 1975 as more fully set forth in paragraph (1) above is denied.

(6) Defendants' motion to stay all proceedings pending prospective and actual appeal in Civil Action Nos. 75-45, 75-46, 75-47, 75-48, 75-49, 75-50 and 75-56 is denied.

UNITED STATES v. ANCORP NATIONAL SERVICES, INC.*

Docket No. 74-1214. F.T.C. Docket No. 7396.

(United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, March 21, 1975)

On appeal from judgment of district court awarding U.S. Government $204,000 plus court costs, appellate court held that order prohibiting allowances respecting "products for resale on newsstands" correctly included newspapers; and defendants' good faith but erroneous interpretation of cease and desist order obligations was not a defense to civil enforcement proceedings; affirmed.

Before TIMBERS, Circuit Judge.

Ancorp National Services, Inc. (Ancorp) appeals from a judgment entered December 18, 1973 after a bench trial in the Southern District of New York, Dudley B. Bonsal, District Judge, 367 F. Supp. 1221, awarding the United States $204,200 in civil penalties, plus $1,430.66 costs, against Ancorp for violations of a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order, and permanently enjoining Ancorp from further violations of the order.

Of the various claims of error raised on appeal, we find that the only ones that warrant discussion are whether the district court correctly concluded that the cease and desist order applies to newspapers and whether the district court exceeded its discretion in fixing the amount of the penalties. For the reasons below, we affirm.

I.

On February 5, 1959, the FTC commenced an administrative proceeding under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45 (1970). It charged Ancorp's predecessor, American News Company,[1] and the latter's wholly owned subsidiary, Union News Company,[2] with having received certain payments or disproportionate promotional allowances from their suppliers in violation of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13(d)(1970). The FTC issued a cease and desist order on January 10, 1961 after a hearing. On a petition to review, we modified the order and, as modified, affirmed and enforced it. American News Company v. FTC, 300 F.2d 104 (2 Cir.), cert. denied, 371 U. S. 824 (1962). The cease and desist order became final on May 13, 1964. It has remained in effect ever since.[3]

During the period 1964-1969, the Union News Division of Ancorp operated a large number of newsstands located primarily at railroad, airport, bus and subway terminals in New York City, as well as in other parts of New York State and in 21 other states and the District of Columbia. Most of these stands sold magazines, comic books, paperback books, candy, tobacco products and other items, in addition to newspapers.

The instant enforcement action was commenced December 31, 1970 by the United States at the direction of the Attorney General acting upon the FTC's certification of facts as to alleged violations by Ancorp of the cease and desist order.[4] The complaint alleged that Ancorp during the period 1965-1969[5] had received compensation from three New York City newspapers (The New York Times, The Daily News and The Post) in connection with promoting and displaying those newspapers on newsstands operated by it in New York and elsewhere; that Ancorp knew or should have known that such compensation was not made available by the newspapers on proportionally equal terms to all of their newsstand customers who were in competition with Ancorp; and that by receiving such compensation Ancorp had violated the cease and desist order. The government sought $585,000 in civil penalties pursuant to Section 5(l) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45(l) (1970), and permanent injunctive relief.

[1] American News Company changed its name to Ancorp National Services, Inc., in 1969.

[2] Union News Company, now an operating division of Ancorp, was a wholly owned subsidiary of American News Company in 1959.

[3] The final cease and desist order provides:

"It Is Ordered that the respondents, The American News Company and the Union News Company, corporations, their officers, employees, agents or representatives, directly or through any corporate or other device, in or in connection with the purchase in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, of products for resale on newsstands operated by respondents, do forthwith cease and desist from:

"Receiving, or inducing and receiving, or contracting for the receipt of, anything of value from any of their suppliers as compensation or in consideration for display or promotional services or facilities furnished by or through respondents in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of products purchased from any of their suppliers, when respondents know or should know that such compensation or consideration is not affirmatively offered or otherwise made available by such suppliers on proportionally equal terms to all their other customers competing with respondents in the sale and distribution of such suppliers' products."

After a four day bench trial, the district court found that during the period in question Union News had billed the Times for "Rental of Space in Newsstands for New York Times Advertising Signs" and the News and Post for "Advertising Service" in an aggregate amount of approximately $4,600 per month and that the newspapers had paid these bills.[6] The court further found that Union News never inquired of the Times, the News or the Post whether payments were being offered on a proportionally equal basis to other newsstand operators who were in competition with Union News. The evidence establishes that in fact the three newspapers did not offer such payments to competitors of Union News.

Based on its finding of 122 violations of the order by Ancorp during the period from January 1, 1966 to July 1, 1969, the court awarded the United States the civil penalties and injunctive relief stated above.

II.

We turn directly to the issue of whether the cease and desist order applies to newspapers.

The language of the order itself surely is broad enough to encompass newspapers. It prohibits respondents from receiving anything of value "from any of their suppliers" in connection with "products for resale on newsstands operated by respondents" or "products purchased from any of their suppliers."

Ancorp contends that the order, although broad, does not apply to newspapers; or, in the alternative, that Ancorp reasonably misconstrued the scope of the order. It points out that the original FTC complaint in 1959 referred only to promotional allowances on magazines, pocket books, comic books and cigars. It argues that, since the practice of granting such allowances on newspapers was in existence prior to 1959, the FTC must have known of and ignored such allowances when it filed its original complaint. We disagree.

[4] Ancorp claims that the action was jurisdictionally defective because the government failed to comply with the certification procedure required by 15 U. S. C. § 56(1970), citing United States v. St. Regis Paper Co., 355 F.2d 688, 699 (2 Cir. 1966). This claim is frivolous. Ancorp did not dispute an affidavit submitted by the government in the district court stating that it had complied with the certification procedure. 367 F.Supp. at 1223 n. 1. The government has included the certification in its appendix in this Court.

[5] Recovery for violations based on payments allegedly received prior to December 31, 1965 is barred by the five year statute of limitations applicable to civil penalty actions. 28 U. S. C. § 2462 (1970).

[6] The court also found that the former New York Herald Tribune and The Wall Street Journal had made substantial payments to Union News during portions of this period.

While it is true that the original proceeding was "primarily concerned with practices in connection with sales of certain publications, including magazines, comic books and pocket books", American News Co. v. FTC, supra, 300 F.2d at 107,[7] it is well settled that the FTC could have included newspapers in its order so as to prevent Ancorp's continuation of its practices by merely substituting newspapers for magazines. FTC v. Broch & Co. 368 U. S. 360, 364 (1962); FTC v. Mandel Brothers 359 U. S. 385, 391-93 (1959); Vanity Fair Paper Mills, Inc. v. FTC 311 F.2d 480, 487 (2 Cir. 1962); Swanee Paper Co. v. FTC 291 F.2d 833, 837-38 (2 Cir. 1961), cert. denied, 368 U. S. 987 (1962).

We hold that the district court here was amply justified in construing the order to encompass newspapers. As we pointed out in United States v. J. B. Williams Co., 498 F.2d 414, 431 (2 Cir. 1974), "[A cease and desist] order must be interpreted in light of its principal purpose. . . ." The purpose here was to prohibit Ancorp in the exercise of its market dominance from demanding and receiving from its suppliers rebates not offered to competitors. The order applies to any suppliers of Ancorp's products. Magazines and books are not different enough from newspapers to make it unfair to construe the order as applicable to newspapers. Ancorp is engaged in a similar function with respect to magazines, books and newspapers: it merely displays them at its newsstands for resale to the public. It would make no sense to interpret the order so as to limit its scope to those products specified in the original complaint and to exclude newspapers from its coverage.

There are other indications that the FTC intended to frame a broad order rather than a narrow one. The hearing examiner's proposed order had enumerated "magazines, pocket books, paperback and comic books, newspapers, cigars, candy, toys and sundry items." The Commission's replacement of this list of products with the phrase "products for resale on newsstands" strongly suggests an intent to generalize, rather than to constrict, the scope of the order.

Moreover, the original complaint had charged unsuccessful inducement of discriminatory payments from cigar manufacturers in violation of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13(d)(1970). While the FTC found this charge to be unsupported by the evidence and therefore did not reach the issue whether such an attempt to induce a violation of Section 2(d) would constitute a violation of Section 5, it stated in its opinion that:

[7] We also noted that Union News stands sold "candy, cigars, cigarettes, and other items in addition to newspapers and magazines." 300 F.2d at 107 (emphasis added).

> We feel that the public interest will be adequately served by an order prohibiting respondents from actually receiving discriminatory allowances from their suppliers, including cigar manufacturers.

Similarly, no evidence was adduced with respect to newspapers, but it also was in the public interest to prohibit discriminatory allowances with respect to them.

If Ancorp had objections to the generalization aspect of the order or was unsure of its meaning, its remedy was to raise the point in its petition to review in this Court or to inquire of the FTC as to the scope of the order before embarking on the course of conduct which resulted in the offenses charged here. See United States v. Beatrice Foods Co. 493 F.2d 1259, 1264, 1269 (8 Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U. S. 961 (1975); Rettinger v. FTC 392 F.2d 454, 456-57 (2 Cir. 1968).

We find no merit in Ancorp's contention that it reasonably misconstrued the scope of the order. A defendant's good faith but erroneous interpretation of the obligations of a cease and desist order which is sufficiently clear to place it on notice of the prohibited conduct, is no defense in a civil enforcement proceeding. A claim of good faith would be relevant only as a factor to be considered by the district court in assessing the penalty to be imposed. United States v. Beatrice Foods Co., supra, 493 F.2d at 1269; United States v. Swingline, Inc. 371 F.Supp. 37, 45 (E. D. N. Y. 1974); United States v. H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc. 262 F.Supp. 383, 389 (S. D. N. Y. 1966); United States v. Vitasafe Corp. 212 F.Supp. 397, 398 (S. D. N. Y. 1962); cf. United States v. St. Regis Paper Co. 285 F.2d 607, 614 (2 Cir. 1960), aff'd 368 U. S. 208 (1961).

Ancorp claims that the amount of the penalties assessed was excessive. The total penalties imposed ($204,200), while somewhat more than the total money received by Ancorp from the Times, the Post and the News from 1966 to 1969, is less than half the amount demanded by the government ($585,000).[8] Determination of the amount of penalties is committed to the informed discretion of the district judge. United States v. J. B. Williams Co., supra, 498 F.2d at 438. Here the judge, in determining the amount of the penalties, 367 F.Supp. 1224-25, explicitly considered each of the factors delineated in Williams. We find no abuse of discretion.

The issuance of a permanent injunction by the district court was justified as a prophylactic measure in view of the near-identity between the instant scheme involving newspapers and that involving magazines and books charged in the original complaint. 15 U. S. C. § 45(l) (Supp. III 1973). See SEC. v. Koenig, 469 F.2d 198, 202 (2 Cir. 1972); Sec v. Manor Nursing Centers, Inc., 458 F.2d 1082, 1100-01 (2 Cir. 1972); United States v. Diapulse Corp. of America, 457 F.2d 25, 27-28 (2 Cir. 1972).

[8] The government in its complaint sought the then maximum penalty per violation ($5,000). 15 U. S. C. § 45(l) (1970). The maximum has since been raised to $10,000 per violation. 15 U. S. C. § 45(l) (Supp. III 1973).

F.T.C. v. LUKENS STEEL CO., and UNITED STATES STEEL CORP.*

Civ. A. No. 74-926. F.T.C. Docket No. 5508.

(United States District Court, District of Columbia, April 5, 1975)

On cross-motions for summary judgment on civil penalties suit, court held that since various requirements enabling F.T.C. to represent itself in court in civil penalties suits had been fulfilled, respondents were not entitled to summary judgment; but, since there was a substantial question of whether steel products sold were of the same category as those covered by the order, F.T.C. was not entitled to summary judgment either.

ORDER

This matter is before the Court on cross-motions for summary judgment. Defendants' motion seems to be clearly without merit. There is no doubt that the FTC has the authority to represent itself in Court under certain circumstances. 15 U.S.C. §§45(m), 56. The various requirements enabling the FTC to represent itself herein have been fulfilled. Defendants' motion will be denied.

In connection with plaintiff's motion, the Court has carefully reviewed both the motion itself and the numerous technical documents filed in support thereof. That review has caused the Court to be of the opinion that there is a substantial question of material fact regarding the appropriate categorization of the types of steel involved here. Plaintiff's motion must also be denied.

Accordingly, it is by the Court this 5th day of April, 1975,

RESORT CAR RENTAL SYSTEM, INC., et al. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 73-3031. F.T.C. Docket No. 8862.

(United States Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, April 14, 1975)

1. IN CASES REQUIRING INFERENCE AND PRAGMATIC JUDGMENT, F.T.C.'S JUDGMENT IS ENTITLED TO GREAT DEFERENCE.

   Federal Trade Commission's judgment is entitled to great deference in deceptive advertising cases as such cases necessarily require inference and pragmatic judgment.

2. PROVIDING IT IS RELEVANT, MATERIAL AND RELIABLE, HEARSAY EVIDENCE IS GENERALLY ADMISSIBLE IN F.T.C. HEARINGS.

   Hearsay evidence is generally admissible in Federal Trade Commission hearing provided that it is relevant, material and reliable.

3. UNLESS TESTIMONY IS INHERENTLY IMPROBABLE, COMMISSION DETERMINATION OF RELIABILITY OF HEARSAY EVIDENCE IS CONCLUSIVE.

   Federal Trade Commission's determination of reliability of hearsay evidence is conclusive unless the testimony is inherently improbable.

4. DETERMINATION OF WHETHER ADVERTISING HAS CAPACITY TO DECEIVE THE PUBLIC IS WITHIN F.T.C.'S EXPERTISE.

   Federal Trade Commission has the expertise to determine whether advertisements have the capacity to deceive or mislead the public; consumer testimony, although sometimes helpful, is not essential.

5. FINDING THAT USE OF SLOGAN AND TRADE NAME "DOLLAR-A-DAY" WAS DECEPTIVE WAS SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

   Evidence sustained finding that use of slogan and trade name "Dollar-A-Day" in connection with automobile rental agencies was deceptive.

6. PUBLIC NOT REQUIRED TO MAKE REASONABLE INQUIRY INTO TRUTH OF ADVERTISING.

   Public is not under any duty to make reasonable inquiry into the truth of advertising; Federal Trade Commission Act is violated if advertising induces the first contact through deception, even if the buyer later becomes fully informed before entering the contract.

7. ADVERTISING CAPABLE OF MISLEADING PUBLIC SHOULD BE CONSTRUED AGAINST ADVERTISER.

   Advertising capable of being interpreted in a misleading way should be construed against the advertiser.

8. ISSUANCE OF CEASE AND DESIST ORDER DOES NOT REQUIRE SHOWING OF ACTUAL DAMAGE TO PUBLIC NOR ACTUAL DECEPTION.

   Neither actual damage to the public nor actual deception need be shown in order for Federal Trade Commission to order business to cease and desist deceptive advertising.

* Reported in 518 F.2d 962 (1975). For case before the Commission, see 83 F.T.C. 234.

9. IN FASHIONING ORDERS APPROPRIATE TO PREVENT UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES, F.T.C. HAS BROAD DISCRETION.

Federal Trade Commission has broad discretion to fashion orders appropriate to prevent unfair trade practices; its discretion was not abused by directing automobile rental agency to cease doing business under the deceptive name "Dollar-A-Day" even though excision of the slogan and trade name allegedly destroyed valuable good will vested in the slogan and name and even though less drastic means were allegedly available to achieve the desired end.

10. RESPONDENTS WERE NOT DENIED DUE PROCESS WHEN THEY WERE INFORMED THROUGH COMPLAINT, INITIAL DECISION AND IN ARGUMENT BEFORE THE COMMISSION THAT EXCISION OF THE TRADE NAME WAS BEING SOUGHT.

Automobile rental agencies which were told, in complaint filed against them by Federal Trade Commission, that excision of their trade name "Dollar-A-Day" was proposed, which knew that excision of the trademark was recommended in the initial decision and order of the Administrative Law Judge and was argued before the Federal Trade Commission and which, due to apparent tactical decision, failed to propose qualifying language, were not denied due process by manner in which Federal Trade Commission arrived at decision to order rental agencies to cease and desist doing business under the name "Dollar-A-Day".

On petition to review cease and desist order of F.T.C., court held that (1) hearsay evidence was admissible before F.T.C.; (2) finding that slogan and trade name "Dollar-A-Day" was deceptive was supported by evidence; (3) inducement of first contact through use of misleading advertisement constituted violation of F.T.C. Act; and (4) due process was not denied where F.T.C. required respondent to cease trading under deceptive trade name.

Affirmed and order enforced.

John T. Fischbach, Atty., F.T.C. (argued), Washington, D.C., for respondent.

OPINION

PER CURIAM:

Petitioners request a review of the Federal Trade Commission's cease and desist order of July 31, 1973. It is contended that the order was not supported by substantial evidence on the record and that it exceeded the scope of the Federal Trade Commission's authority to prescribe remedial measures.

* The Honorable Otto R. Skopil, Jr., United States District Judge, District of Oregon, sitting by designation.

[1] We review the evidence to determine whether it was sufficient to reasonably support the Commission's conclusions. The Federal Trade Commission's judgment is entitled to great deference here because deceptive advertising cases necessarily require "inference and pragmatic judgment". Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 85 S.Ct. 1035, 13 L.Ed.2d 904 (1965).

[2,3] Petitioners' challenge to the evidence is concentrated on hearsay questions regarding the testimony of two consumer witnesses and documents upon which their testimony was partially based. We note in passing that hearsay is generally admissible in Federal Trade Commission hearings provided it is relevant, material, and reliable. Callaway Mills Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 362 F.2d 435 (5th Cir. 1966); Samuel H. Moss, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 148 F.2d 378 (2d Cir. 1945). The Commission's determination of reliability is conclusive unless the testimony is "inherently improbable". Universal Camera [964] Corp. v. NLRB, 340 U.S. 474, 71 S.Ct. 456, 95 L.Ed. 456 (1951).

[4,5] Detailed scrutiny of the hearsay problems raised is unnecessary here because substantial evidence exists even if the disputed testimony and documents are stricken from the record. The Federal Trade Commission has the expertise to determine whether advertisements have the capacity to deceive or mislead the public. Consumer testimony, although sometimes helpful, is not essential. Floersheim v. Federal Trade Commission, 411 F.2d 874 (9th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1002, 90 S.Ct. 551, 24 L.Ed.2d 494; Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., supra. The Commission could have arrived at the same conclusions regarding the deceptive nature of petitioners' advertising without its consumer witnesses, whose testimony merely supported the inferences which can logically be drawn by scrutinizing the advertising alone. The "Dollar-A-Day" slogan carries strong psychological appeal. Its connotations are obvious. The design of the form contracts used by petitioners tended to continue the deception initiated by the slogan.

[6-8] Contrary to petitioners' assertions, the public is not under any duty to make reasonable inquiry into the truth of advertising. The Federal Trade Act is violated if it induces the first contact through deception, even if the buyer later becomes fully informed before entering the contract. Exposition Press, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 295 F.2d 869 (2d Cir. 1961), cert. denied, 370 U.S. 917, 82 S.Ct. 1554, 8 L.Ed.2d 497; Carter Products, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 186 F.2d 821 (7th Cir. 1951). Advertising capable of being interpreted in a misleading way should be construed against the advertiser. Ward Laboratories, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 276 F.2d 952 (2d Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 827, 81 S.Ct. 65, 5 L.Ed.2d

[9] Petitioners further complain that the Commission's order exceeded its lawful authority to proscribe unlawful trade practices. They argue that excision of the trade name "Dollar-A-Day" destroyed the valuable good will vested in that slogan when less drastic means could have achieved the desired end.

The Federal Trade Commission has broad discretion to fashion orders appropriate to prevent unfair trade practices. That was not abused here. The order was reasonably related to its goals. As the order stated, "[t]he trade name, 'dollar-a-day' by its nature has a decisive connotation for which any qualifying language would result in a contradiction in terms".

[10] Petitioners' due process arguments are betrayed by the record. Excision of the trademark was a threshold proposal in the complaint, was recommended in the initial decision and order of the Administrative Law Judge, and was argued before the Commission. Petitioners' apparent failure to propose qualifying language was a tactical decision. The Federal Trade Commission's order reveals that the Commission considered that possibility anyway. If anything, petitioners received more due process on this issue than they sought. See Burlington Truck Lines v. United States, 371 U.S. 156, 83 S.Ct. 239, 9 L.Ed.2d 207 (1962); Carter Products, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 268 F.2d 461 (9th Cir. 1959), cert. denied, 361 U.S. 884, 80 S.Ct. 155, 4 L.Ed.2d 120.

Bell Rent-A-Car, Inc. has been dismissed from this appeal for lack of jurisdiction because it was not included in the Commission's disputed order. 15 U.S.C. § 45(c).

Affirmed and ordered enforced.

ASH GROVE CEMENT COMPANY v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

Nos. 73-2212, 74-1144. F.T.C. Docket No. 8795.

(United States Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit, April 16, 1975)

1. UNDER FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT "INVESTIGATORY FILES" AND "STAFF DIRECTIVES" OR "BLUE MINUTES" ARE PROTECTED FROM DISCLOSURE.

Records which Federal Trade Commission designated as "investigatory files" and Commission minutes designated as "staff directives" or "blue minutes" were protected from disclosure under Freedom of Information Act.

* Reported in 511 F.2d 815 (1975). See also pp. 565, 796, 815, 1371 and 1533 herein.

2. DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN DENYING DISCOVERY OF CERTAIN DOCUMENTS WITHOUT in camera inspection of a random sample.

In proceeding by company subject to agency complaint pending before Federal Trade Commission for discovery of certain documents from Commission's files, trial court erred in denying discovery without inspecting at least a random sample of documents sufficient to provide objectively verifiable basis for determining whether Commission's descriptions of documents as "internal memoranda" were conclusory or instead reasonably accurate and specific.

3. PRIMA FACIE SUBJECT TO DISCLOSURE ARE COMMISSION CHRONOLOGICAL MINUTES CONTAINING "POLICY DETERMINATIONS," UNDER FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT.

Chronological minutes of Federal Trade Commission proceedings, described as containing "policy determinations", were prima facie subject to disclosure under Freedom of Information Act.

4. F.T.C. DESCRIPTION WAS CONCLUSORY AND INSUFFICIENT TO SHIELD MINUTES FROM DISCLOSURE.

Federal Trade Commission's one paragraph, 77-word description covering all its agency chronological minutes was clearly conclusory and insufficient in itself to shield minutes from disclosure under Freedom of Information Act as internal memoranda.

In Freedom of Information Act suit, Court held that district court erred and remanded a portion of the suit to the lower court with direction to inspect in camera at least a random sample of certain internal memoranda and certain "chronological minutes" of the Commission. The lower court had determined on the basis of affidavits and without inspecting the documents in camera, that they were exempt from disclosure. The Court also directed that the Commission be required to furnish an itemized description of the requested minutes.

Remanded.

* Sitting by designation pursuant to Title 28, U.S. Code, Section 292(d).

[816] This is an action arising under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA)[1] as an outgrowth of an investigation by the Federal Trade Commission of Ash Grove Cement Company, plaintiff-appellant here, and others. Rather than remain on the defensive in the FTC proceeding, Ash Grove took the offensive by filing an action in the District Court for the discovery of certain documents in the possession of the agency, which Ash Grove asserted were necessary to substantiate its defense that the Commission has prejudged all of the allegations in the agency complaint now before the Commission for adjudication. Of the four categories of documents involved, the District Court inspected two in camera, declined to inspect two categories, and ultimately determined that plaintiff was entitled to access to none of the documents. Finding that the District Court based its classification of some of the documents on inadequate information and that it should have made further inspection, we remand to the District Court for action in accordance with this opinion.

[1] The two categories which the District Judge did inspect were those the FTC designated as "investigatory files" and those Commission minutes designated as "staff directives," the so-called "blue minutes." After inspection in camera the District Judge concluded that these documents had been properly classified by the agency and that under Exemptions 7 and 5 of the FOIA[2] they were protected from disclosure. We agree.[3]

The District Judge likewise determined, but without in camera inspection, that the third and fourth categories of documents were exempt from disclosure. Regarding these we have difficulty.

[2] Documents of the third category were defined by the FTC as "internal memoranda," asserted to fall under Exemption 5 of the FOIA.[4] After the usual interchange of demands and a partial agreement between counsel, the agency released some documents to Ash Grove for inspection, but balked at releasing [817] forty-two to which plaintiff's demand had been narrowed. These were listed and described in an affidavit by an attorney in the Commission's Office of General Counsel as "internal memoranda." Ash Grove asserts that the description of each document given by the FTC affidavit is so

[2] 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(b)(5) and (7): (b) This section does not apply to matters that are—

> (5) inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency;
> (7) investigatory files compiled for law enforcement purposes except to the extent available by law to a party other than an agency;

[3] The four investigatory files and the seventeen directive-type minutes submitted for in camera inspection by the agency were found to be exempt from disclosure under Exemptions 7 and 5, respectively, by order of the District Court on 22 December 1973. This action is made the subject of the appeal in No. 74-1144, which is affirmed. The appeal from the opinion and order of 24 October 1973 is No. 73-2212, which is the subject of our remand for reconsideration in accordance with this opinion.

conclusory as to be of little aid to the trial court and, therefore, legally insufficient under Vaughn v. Rosen[5] and others of our FOIA decisions. The District Judge found, on the other hand, that "[t]hese descriptions are more than mere conclusions."

Our review of the descriptions of the forty-two documents indicates that Ash Grove may well be right; we could not be satisfied by these general descriptions that each of the forty-two documents is properly defined as "internal memoranda," and that each falls within Exemption 5. The District Judge could not have reached any more definite and secure conclusion than we are able to on appeal, since he did not inspect in camera any of the forty-two documents. Had he verified the accuracy of at least a few of the agency's descriptions, his acceptance at face value of the accuracy of the rest would have stood on more solid ground. In the absence of more specific document analysis by the agency, we think such a procedure was necessary to meet the requirement of Vaughn v. Rosen that judicial determinations under the FOIA be based upon a detailed record. Therefore, on remand we direct that the District Judge inspect at least a random sample of these forty-two documents sufficient to provide an objectively verifiable basis for deciding whether the agency descriptions are indeed conclusory or instead reasonably accurate and specific.

The fourth category of documents is described as the Commission's "chronological minutes," and is asserted by the Commission likewise to fall under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. In an affidavit, the Secretary of the Commission described these chronological minutes as > . . . accounts of the Commission's executive meetings and conferences . . . the deliberations of the Commission such as exchange of opinions between individual Commissioners, their recommendations, motions, discussions and statements. They also contain staff recommendations and involve pending cases, internal reorganization procedures, personnel actions, policy determinations and generally reflect the Commission's decision-making process.[6]

This description was relied on by the District Judge in his Second Memorandum Order of 22 February 1973[7] and Memorandum Opinion of 24 October 1973.[8] Significantly, the District Judge thought that "[p]laintiff . . . apparently accepts the characterization of chronological minutes as set forth above, . . ."[9]

[3] Ash Grove sharply disputes the Commission's characterization of its chronological minutes, points to pleadings in the record in which it has done so, and asserts that it has described these minutes more accurately as > stenographic and other detailed recordings of transactions, voting decisions, binding > opinions, policies, interpretations and other actions of the Commission or of individual Commissioners [relating to the actions taken by the Commission during its 1964-1967 Trade Regulation Rule Proceeding Concerning Vertical Integration in the Cement Industry][10]

Ash Grove argues that these chronological minutes contain "secret law" and proof positive of its defense in the FTC proceeding that its fate is foreordained and its case has been prejudged by covert decisions of the Commission growing [818] out of a previous trade regulation rule-making proceeding in 1964-1967. Ash Grove also asserts, and we think correctly, that where the agency Secretary and the trial judge described the chronological minutes as containing "policy determinations," such minutes or portions thereof were subject to disclosure under Sterling Drug, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission,[11] in which we held that such determinations are prima facie disclosable.[12]

[4] The agency's one-paragraph description of seventy-seven words of all the agency chronological minutes, not just the minutes demanded by the plaintiffs, is clearly conclusory under the standard of Vaughn v. Rosen,[13] Cuneo v. Schlesinger,[14] and Pacific Architects and Engineers, Inc. v. Renegotiation Board.[15] The affidavit relied upon by the agency and the District Judge does not assert that any of these minutes have ever been examined by any agency employee to determine their exact content; there has been no inspection by the trial court in camera; and no sample of the minutes has been examined.

We remand for these reasons: First, we think that "policy determinations" at least, and perhaps other matters included, are subject to public scrutiny. Second, before ruling whether the chronological minutes are protected against disclosure by Exemption 5, the District Judge should examine in camera a representative portion of the minutes.[16] Third, the District Judge should require an itemized description to be made of these minutes as he required for the forty-two staff memoranda.

The case is remanded for action in accordance with this opinion.

So ordered.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. JERRY L. FELDMAN, President and CHECKER TAXI COMPANY, INC.*

Civ. A. No. 74 C 2787. F.T.C. File No. 99-183.

(United States District Court, Northern District of Illinois, April 30, 1975)

In subpoena enforcement proceeding, court held that respondent's contention that precedent cases in Supreme Court precluded enforcement of subpoena was not dispositive of the instant case in light of potential differences in facts and law between those cases and current F.T.C. investigation; and there was insufficient basis in record for finding that production of the subpoenaed information will do serious harm to respondent's business.

Subpoena enforced.

The court retained jurisdiction in the event that compliance with subpoena could be shown to be extremely burdensome.

Before PARSONS, Chief Judge.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

This is a proceeding initiated by the Federal Trade Commission (hereafter FTC) to enforce an administrative subpoena duces tecum which was issued on March 19, 1973. Respondents contend that the subpoena should not be enforced.

Respondents argue that the decisions in U.S. v. Yellow Cab, 332 U.S. 218 (1947) and U.S. v. Yellow Cab, 338 U.S. 338 (1949) preclude enforcement. I am of the opinion that these decisions are not dispositive of the dispute now before me. Though not legally binding, the rationale of FTC v. Markin, No. K 74-268 CA (W.D. Mich. 1974) is quite persuasive. Furthermore, the FTC has admitted that the doctrine of res judicata possibly applies to certain parts of its current investigation; in seeking enforcement, it seeks only factual material with which to explore this possibility. And, a decision by this Court on the res judicata effects of the two Yellow Cab cases would seem to be premature in light of the potential differences in facts and law between those two cases and the alleged scope of the current FTC investigation. Similarly, a decision on the "in commerce" issue would be premature. In its first Yellow Cab decision, the Supreme Court expressly stated that it did not intend to establish any absolute rule that local taxi service was "beyond the reach of federal power." 332 U.S. at 232.

I am also of the opinion that there is an insufficient basis in the record at this time for finding that the production of the subpoenaed information will do serious harm to respondents' business. Yet should such harm later become apparent, relief is available under the terms of the Court's order enforcing the subpoena.

* Not otherwise reported. Affirmed, 532 F.2d 1092 (1976).

In light of the foregoing, an order should issue compelling the respondents to produce the evidence requested in the subpoena duces tecum.

ORDER

Petitioner, the Federal Trade Commission, having invoked the aid of this Court, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. 49, in requiring respondents, Jerry L. Feldman, President, Checker Taxi Company, Inc., and Checker Taxi Company, Inc., to comply with an administrative subpoena duces tecum issued by petitioner in an investigation being conducted by petitioner (Federal Trade Commission File No. 721 0091); and the Court having considered the verified petition and other papers of record, and, the Court being of the opinion that the relief sought by petitioner should be granted, it is hereby ORDERED that respondents Jerry L. Feldman, President, Checker Taxi Company, Inc., and Checker Taxi Company, Inc., produce the evidence requested in the subpoena duces tecum issued by the Commission on March 19, 1973.

The parties will, prior to the production of evidence, pursuant to the Federal Trade Commission's offer, meet in a good faith effort to modify the subpoena's terms so as to make compliance with its specifications not unduly burdensome on respondents.

In the event that compliance with the subpoena's terms becomes patently vexatious and serious hindrance to the pursuit of respondent's business, the parties may file the appropriate supplemental motions, fully supported by briefs, and the Court will reconsider those specifications thus put in issue in supplemental proceedings.

It is further ORDERED that a certified copy of this order be served forthwith upon respondents Jerry L. Feldman and Checker Taxi Company, Inc., by the United States Marshal.

ALUMINUM CO. OF AMERICA v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

Civ. A. No. 75 Civil 17. F.T.C. File No. 99-196.

(United States District Court, Southern District of New York, May 5, 1975)

On motion for class action determination, court held that there was no need for a class action in case contesting F.T.C. line-of-business reporting program since a favorable decision for the companies would inure to the benefit of every corporation required to file a line-of-business report.

Before WEINFELD, District Judge:

There have been so many motions and cross-motions in this and the related proceeding commenced by the Federal Trade Commission that there is no need to elaborate on their nature or the parties thereto. The instant motion is by the original plaintiffs for a class action determination.

The FTC order requiring the filing of LB reports was directed to 345 of the leading manufacturing corporations of the United States. Of these, 137 had filed reports as of February 11, 1975. Ninety-two companies are challenging the LB program in this court; in addition to the twelve original plaintiffs, sixty-two companies have intervened in the instant suit and eighteen companies have brought separate actions, most of which have been consolidated with this action. Fourteen other corporations are challenging the program in the District Court of Delaware. In addition, there is the Commission's enforcement proceeding against those corporations that have not complied with the Order to File LB reports. Each corporation, whether an original plaintiff, an intervenor, or a respondent in the Commission's proceeding, is in a position to protect its own interests. Those corporations which have not joined in this suit or filed suits of their own are aware of the alternatives open to them and are fully able to fend for themselves.

In any event, to the extent that this action raises general issues capable of resolution without examination of a particular company's circumstances, a favorable disposition of this lawsuit will inure to the benefit of every corporation that was required to file an LB report. There is no need for a class action. See Galvan v. Levine, 490 F.2d 1255, 1261 (2d Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 417 U.S. 936 (1974); Vulcan Society v. Civil Service Comm'n, 490 F.2d 387, 399 (2d Cir.), aff'g in part 360 F.Supp. 1265, 1266-67 n. 1 (S.D.N.Y. 1973).

The motion for a class action determination is denied.

UNITED STATES v. PAPERCRAFT CORPORATION*

Civ. A. No. 74-816 F.T.C. Docket 8779

(United States District Court, Western District of Pennsylvania, May 9, 1975)

1. WHERE THERE IS A VIOLATION OF F.T.C. ORDERS, MAXIMUM PENALTIES OF $10,000 PER DAY ARE AVAILABLE.

Maximum penalties of $10,000 per day are available for violation of Federal Trade Commission order.

2. PENALTIES MUST BE SUFFICIENT TO ELIMINATE "AN ACCEPTABLE COST OF VIOLATION."

Penalties for violation of Federal Trade Commission corporate divestiture order must be sufficient to eliminate benefit which parent has had through its failure to divest subsidiary, to compel parent to divest, and to create deterrent to further delay in compliance so that others will not choose like course in future.

3. THAT REDUCTION OF COMPETITION THROUGH ILLEGAL MERGERS IS IS INJURIOUS TO THE PUBLIC IS A MAJOR PREMISE OF ANTITRUST LAW.

It is major premise of antitrust laws that reduction of competition through illegal mergers is injurious to public.

4. F.T.C. ORDER DEADLINE SETS DATE ON WHICH PENALTIES ARE ASSESSED, NOT DATE VIOLATOR CLAIMED NOTICE WAS RECEIVED.

Penalties for violation of Federal Trade Commission corporate divestiture order would be assessed from deadline set in order rather than from date which violator claimed that it first received notice of finalization of order.

5. A PENALTY OF $7,500 PER DAY WOULD BE ASSESSED WHERE PARENT COMPANY RECEIVED $5,000 PER DAY PROFIT THROUGH LACK OF GOOD-FAITH EFFORT TO COMPLY WITH DIVESTITURE ORDER.

Where parent corporation under Federal Trade Commission order to divest subsidiary did not make good-faith effort to comply by setting price too high and failing to advertise subsidiary, parent received about $5,000 per day profit from retaining subsidiary, parent's earnings were some 6.3 million dollars in previous year, and parent's acquisition of subsidiary resulted in merger of two largest competitors in the field thereby injuring competition, penalty of $7,500 per day would be assessed against parent.

6. PARENT WOULD BE REQUIRED TO SUBMIT DIVESTITURE PLAN WITHIN 60 DAYS OF COURT'S ORDER CONSIDERING OFFERS MADE, INTEREST SHOWN IN SUBSIDIARY, AND PUBLIC ADVERTISING RESULTS.

In proceeding by government for penalties and injunctive relief for violation of Federal Trade Commission corporate divestiture order, in consideration of details of offers made for subsidiary, extensive interest shown by many substantial corporations in subsidiary and results received from public advertising, parent would be required to submit divestiture plan subject to approval by FTC within 60 days.

In suit for civil penalties, court held that penalties would be assessed from deadline set in F.T.C. order; parent firm did not make a good-faith effort to comply with the divestiture order; that, considering that company made approximately $5,000 per day profit, a penalty of $7,500 per day would be assessed; and that firm had 60 days to submit divestiture plans to F.T.C. for approval.

SNYDER, District Judge.

In this proceeding for violations of a Federal Trade Commission (FTC) Order requiring Papercraft Corporation (Papercraft) to divest itself of CPS Indus[417]tries, Inc. (CPS), the Government seeks the maximum penalty of $10,000 per day and a mandatory injunction directing compliance. On March 11, 1975, this Court by Opinion and Order granted the Government's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment, finding Papercraft to be in default of the Divestiture Order. A lengthy history was there given which will not be repeated except as here required for clear understanding.

Proceedings for divestiture were initiated by the FTC on April 10, 1969, alleging illegal acquisition of CPS by Papercraft in December of 1967. FTC's initial Order requiring divestiture was issued June 30, 1971. On June 6, 1973, a Modified Order was entered in compliance with the unappealed Mandate of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals.[1] The Modified Order required Papercraft, within six months of the date thereof, to "divest, absolutely and in good faith, subject to the approval of the Federal Trade Commission, all assets, properties, rights and privileges, . . . of CPS Industries, Inc., . . .". None of the assets were permitted to be transferred to any person who was an officer, director or employee of Papercraft or affiliated corporations, or who controlled more than 1% of the shares of Papercraft Corporation, or to anyone who was not approved in advance by the FTC. However, it was provided that Papercraft could divest itself without the preceding limitations being applicable, if such divestiture was accomplished through a new corporation whose shares could be distributed to the stockholders of Papercraft in proportion to their holdings of Papercraft stock. For a period of ten years, Papercraft was ordered not to acquire, in whole or in part, stock or assets of any concern engaged in the manufacture, production, sale or distribution of any decorative gift wrap product.

[1] Papercraft Corporation v. F.T.C., 472 F.2d 927 (7th Cir. 1973) modified the FTC's Order only in minor matters. It deleted ¶ IX, which reads as follows:

"IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that for a period of three (3) years from the date of divestiture The Papercraft Corporation is prohibited from selling any decorative gift wrap products to any customer account which at any time has been sold any decorative gift wrap products by CPS Industries, Inc., unless such customer account was sold such decorative gift wrap products by The Papercraft Corporation prior to December 27, 1967."

The Cease and Desist Order as modified was enforced.

Papercraft twice requested extensions of the FTC Order which were rejected, and on August 6, 1974, the FTC, pursuant to Section 16 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 56, certified the proceedings to the Attorney General of the United States setting forth that Papercraft had neither divested itself of CPS nor presented to the FTC any plan for divestiture of CPS by sale or spinoff.

Papercraft in this Court unsuccessfully asserted error of the FTC in denying requests for extension, and rather obliquely challenged the FTC's certification to the Attorney General. This Court entered Summary Judgment on the Order violation. A rather lengthy hearing was held by this Court on the imposition of civil penalties and the framing of a mandatory injunction to prevent continuation of the violation of the FTC Divestiture Order.

NON-COMPLIANCE

[1] The Government's suit was brought under both the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act. Section 5(l) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45(l),[2] autho[418]rized a penalty of not more than $5,000 for each violation. Under Section 11(l) of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 21(l),[3] a penalty of not more than $5,000 for each violation was established. The maximum penalty for violation of Section 5(l) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(l), has since been increased from $5,000 to $10,000. See, Pub.L. 93-153, Title IV, § 408(c), 87 Stat. 591, 592 (1973). These statutes must be read in pari materia. Federal Trade Com. v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 690, 68 S.Ct. 793, 92 L.Ed. 1010 (1948); Federal Trade Commission v. Reed, 243 F.2d 308 (7th Cir. 1957). Thus, maximum penalties of $10,000 per day are available as contended for by the Government.[4]

Congress, as evidenced by the legislative history, was fully cognizant

[2] 15 U.S.C. § 45(l) provided, prior to amendment:

"Any person, partnership, or corporation who violates an order of the Commission to cease and desist after it has become final, and while such order is in effect, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $5,000 for each violation, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States. Each separate violation of such an order shall be a separate offense, except that in the case of a violation through continuing failure or neglect to obey a final order of the Commission each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense."

[3] 15 U.S.C. § 21(l) provides:

"Any person who violates any order issued by the commission or board under subsection (b) of this section after such order has become final, and while such order is in effect, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $5,000 for each violation, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States. Each separate violation of any such order shall be a separate offense, except that in the case of a violation through continuing failure or neglect to obey a final order of the commission or board each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense."

[4] As noted in United States v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 420 U.S. 223, 231, 95 S.Ct. 926, 931, 43 L.Ed.2d 148, 157 (1975), in footnote 6:

". . . [T]he District Court has discretion to determine the amount of the penalty for each violation of the problem before the Court of determining sufficient monetary penalties to provide incentive for prompt compliance with FTC Orders. Thus, in recommending passage of the 1959 Amendment to the Clayton Act, to bring it into accord with the 1938 Wheeler-Lea Amendment to the Federal Trade Commission Act, the House Committee on the Judiciary observed:

> . . . Although the maximum penalty may be severe, in certain cases it would be appropriate. In the absence of the maximum penalty for a continuing offense, for example, commission and board orders with respect to mergers and interlocking directorships would be ineffective.

The House further went on to add that:

> . . . In such cases, unless the maximum penalty applied and each day of a continuing violation considered a separate offense, an order dissolving an unlawful merger could be ignored after the mere payment of a $5,000 fine. (House Report No. 580, 86th Congress, First Session, U.S.Code, Congressional and Administrative News, pp. 1804, 1807 (1959)).

The United States Supreme Court in United States v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 420 U.S. 223, 95 S.Ct. 926, 43 L.Ed.2d 148 (1975), in the same context stated as follows (at p. 231, 95 S.Ct. at p. 932, 43 L.Ed.2d at p. 158):

> The legislative history also makes clear that Congress was concerned with avoiding a situation in which the statutory penalty would be regarded by potential violators of FTC orders as nothing more than an acceptable cost of violation, rather than as a deterrence to violation. . . .

One of the clearest expositions of the court's approach to civil penalties was [419] given by Judge Lay in United States v. Beatrice Foods Co., 493 F.2d 1259 (8th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 95 S.Ct. 1350, 43 L.Ed.2d 438, where the following appears in a factual situation very close to ours (at pp. 1270-1271):

> . . . As the government persuasively urges here:
> "For competitive purposes there is nothing intrinsically wrong with the "act of acquisition" in and of itself. Rather it is the effect of an acquisition, the relationship it creates which may lead to its proscription. . . . The order's express and agreed terms barred further "acquisitions" and that term plainly had the same meaning as in Section 7 of the Clayton Act. The anti-competitive effects of acquisitions condemned by Section 7 come from the fact that, by holding the assets, the acquiring firm changes the competitive structure of the industry involved. It is the permanent effect of prohibited acquisitions which Congress sought to remedy in the statute. . . . [Any other interpretation] would convert all orders barring future acquisitions into minor expenses of any acquisition or merger, for the prohibition could be avoided by payment of a $5,000 penalty. (emphasis added)"

In Gottesman v. General Motors Corp., 414 F.2d 956 (2d Cir. 1969), Cert. denied, 403 U.S. 911, 91 S.Ct. 2208, 29 L.Ed.2d 689 (1971), the court reasoned:

whether the transactions are construed as single or as continuing violations. Thus, while totalling the penalty as a series of daily violations rather than as a single violation could raise substantially the total penalty assessed, the statutory scheme does not require that result, and the trial judge's determination would prevail in the absence of an abuse of discretion."

> "Here the very acquisition and position of potential control which was found violative of the Clayton Act as of 1949 continued through 1961. We need not dispute the statement of the district court that, in the ordinary antitrust case, there is no "presumption of continuance of unlawful conduct." Here, however, what was unlawful was du Pont's status as stockholder in General Motors, and that status continued until divestiture."

Id. at 965 (emphasis added).

Similarly, in United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 77 S.Ct. 872, 1 L.Ed.2d 1057 (1957), the defendants argued that where the challenged stock acquisition occurred in 1917, the government could not bring suit in 1949 to undo the acquisition since § 7 was applicable only to the acquisition and not to the subsequent holding of the stock. The Supreme Court rejected this argument:

> "We repeat, that the test of a violation of § 7 is whether, at the time of suit, there is a reasonable probability that the acquisition is likely to result in the condemned restraints. . . . The fire that was kindled in 1917 continues to smolder."

Id. at 607, 77 S.Ct. at 884 (emphasis added).

In United States v. Schine, 260 F.2d 552 (2d Cir. 1958), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 934, 79 S.Ct. 318, 3 L.Ed.2d 306 (1959), the defendants were found to have violated an antitrust decree by acquiring interests in theaters without prior court approval. The defendants tried to argue that the statute of limitations on these acquisitions had run; however, the court held:

> "[A]lthough the initial acts in contempt of the decree occurred prior to the statutory period, the 'illegal' conditions which they created continued up to the date of the order to show cause and resulted in what might be called 'continuing contempts.' "

Id. at 555-556. [Footnote omitted]

In United States v. J. B. Williams Company, Inc., 498 F.2d. 414 (2d Cir. 1974), Judge Friendly had the following to say (at pp. 438-439):

> While there appears to be no authority on the point, we would think it [420] desirable that the court accord an evidentiary hearing on the amount of the penalty if this is reasonably and seasonably requested either by the defendants or by the Government. As the court below recognized, the size of the penalty should be based on a number of factors including the good or bad faith of the defendants, the injury to the public, and the defendants' ability to pay. 354 F.Supp. [521] at 548. See United States v. Universal Wool Batting Corp., 1961 Trade Cases ¶ 70, 168 (S.D.N.Y.1961); United States v. Vitasafe Corp., 212 F.Supp. 397 (S.D.N.Y.1962); United States v. Wilson Chemical Co., 1962 Trade Cases ¶ 70, 478 (W.D.Pa.1962), aff'd, 319 F.2d 133 (3 Cir. 1963); United States v. H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc., 262 F.Supp. 383, 389 (S.D.N.Y.1966); United States v. Bostic, supra, 336 F.Supp. [1312] at 1321. . . .

[2] We agree with the Government's basic position that the penalties must be sufficient to: (1) eliminate the benefit which Papercraft has had through its failure to divest CPS; (2) compel it to divest; and, (3) create a deterrent to further delay in compliance, so that others will not choose a like course in the future. The penalties must be sufficient to eliminate "an acceptable cost of violation". United States v. ITT Continental Baking Co., supra.

THE PENALTIES

I. The Evidence Of Good Faith

The Government contends the evidence shows Papercraft never seriously considered the alternative forms of divestiture available to it under the FTC Order, but only sought a sale transaction at an unreasonably high price. They point to the fact that Papercraft set a sale price of $37,500,000 for CPS, which was almost seven times the 1967 acquisition price of $5,706,000,[5] and approximately twenty times CPS' 1974 earnings of $1,992,294. The Government further points out that this price was set in an effort to make a good sale for Papercraft shareholders, and was maintained for an unreasonable period of time, in total disregard of the FTC Order requiring unconditional divestiture of CPS not later than December 16, 1973.

Papercraft, to the contrary, takes the position that it exercised good faith and due care in attempting to effectuate compliance. It points out that following the issuance of the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit on January 25, 1973, Papercraft considered the possibility of filing a petition for certiorari to the United States Supreme Court but also, at the same time, considered plans to effect the divestiture of CPS. By late March or early April of 1973, Papercraft's management had decided not to file a petition for certiorari, and immediately began actively to originate plans to sell CPS. Within a short time, Papercraft employed Blyth Eastman Dillon (BED), its investment banker with experience in this field, as exclusive agent to assist in divestiture under the two options which it considered to be available to it to achieve full compliance: (1) Papercraft could sell either the stock or assets of CPS to another company in exchange for stock, cash or notes, or a combination thereof; or (2) CPS could be reestablished as an independent company by the spinoff of CPS stock to Papercraft stockholders, or the sale of CPS stock to the public, or an offer to exchange CPS stock for outstanding Papercraft stock. Papercraft contends the first option was the only realistic choice "either from the point of view of financial benefit to Papercraft's stockholders or for the maintenance of [421] CPS as a viable economic competitor." (Papercraft's Trial Brief at p. 12).[6]

Papercraft, in consultation with BED, concluded, after consideration

[5] Papercraft paid for CPS with 285,300 shares of Papercraft stock valued for the purposes of the transaction at $20 per share.

[6] Papercraft argued in its Trial Brief that the second option was not feasible for many reasons, including:

"(a) There is serious doubt that CPS would remain a successful viable concern as an independent entity, as evidenced by its declining condition prior to acquisition by Papercraft. In particular, it would lack the strong upper echelon management group which was available to it through Papercraft and the additional financial resources which Papercraft was able to provide from time to time.

(b) There would be little or no market for the sale of CPS stock by the public generally. If the stock was spun off to stockholders of Papercraft, the FTC Order requires that the substantial block obtained by the Katz family be sold of such factors as historic price-earnings ratios of Papercraft stock, the price-earnings ratios of comparable consumer-oriented companies, general market conditions and interest rates, and the projected profitability of CPS, that an asking price of $37,500,000 was justified. BED seemed not to have played a major role in the final price determination. Despite preparation of a confidential report on CPS, and a rather wide circulation of that report by BED, early reaction to this price was not favorable. For example, Allen H. Seed III of The Gillette Company "concluded that . . . [CPS] wouldn't be of interest to us at anywhere near the price level contemplated." Dan Rodgers, Chairman of John F. Murray Advertising Agency, Inc., stated on behalf of American Home Products Company, that the "asking price is substantially above anything we could consider." E. J. Sullivan of Borden, Inc. reportedly discussed an initial offer on a cash basis of $20,000,000. Kraftco, through an intermediary, indicated that they would be willing to consider a price of $25,500,000.

By September 12, 1973, the FTC staff was communicating with Papercraft, noting that "some prospective acquirers considered the asking price for the property to be divested to be too high. In this connection, you are reminded that the obligation to divest which the Commission's order imposes, is paramount to any consideration of price." (Govt. Exhibit 25, Letter of Lawrence E. Gray, attorney for the FTC). And again, on October 24, 1973, after continued generation of negative responses, Attorney Gray wrote Papercraft's attorneys about its excessive price. (Govt. Exhibit 27). On December 19, 1973, FTC attorney Wayne Kaplan wrote to Papercraft's attorneys addressing the rigidity of Papercraft's price and stated "we believe the record shows that respondent's continued adherence to the $37.5 million asking price has deterred prospects from further interest in CPS at a lower price level." (Govt. Exhibit 33). When Papercraft was unable to secure favorable response to its request for additional time from the FTC by letter-petition dated December 3, 1973, it effected certain changes early in January 1974 in its procedures for divestiture. It (1) appointed a Divestiture Committee, composed of outside directors and Papercraft's Chairman of the Board, to monitor closely the efforts to divest CPS, and (2) it reduced the asking price to $29,000,000 (which was still more than five times the price paid by Papercraft in 1967).

It is noted that at this time the exclusive brokerage arrangement with BED was terminated; four additional banking firms were within six months. The existence of so large a block of stock in an untried company would further depress whatever public market existed for CPS stock.

(c) Aside from the monetary interests of Papercraft and its stockholders, re-establishing CPS as an independent company would be contrary to the basic purposes sought to be achieved by the FTC, since a weakened and ineffective CPS would not be a strong competitor in the gift wrap field." [footnote omitted].

approached to assist divestiture; Papercraft circulated the confidential report to the acquisition de[422]partments of eight major accounting firms eliciting the interest of their clients in purchasing CPS; and in response to the specific urging of the FTC, Papercraft advertised CPS in the Wall Street Journal and the New York Times. (The FTC is particularly critical of Papercraft's failure to advertise in these highly respected papers long before January of 1974). Following placement of the advertisements, Papercraft and BED received many inquiries, and more than a passing interest was indicated by such companies as American Can Company, American Home Products, Borden, Inc., Swingline Division of American Brands, Ward Foods, Inc., Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company, Dart Industries, Inc., Avery Products, Revlon, Inc., Wyomissing Corporation, and Franklin Mint.

Papercraft continued [sic] to receive numerous indications that its asking price of $29,000,000 was regarded as being too high. C. A. Nelson, Vice President of Dart Industries, Inc., wrote Papercraft on March 6, 1974, that "it is difficult from our point of view to justify a value anywhere near that indicated by you." (Deft. Exhibit AA). Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company stated on March 12, 1974, that "we would have no real interest in the acquisition unless the price were considerably less than half of the asking price." (Deft. Exhibit CC). William D. Walsh of Arcata National wrote on March 26, 1974, that Arcata proposed a valuing of CPS in the range of $12 to $12.5 million which was "close to 7 times 1973 earnings and at about $5,000,000 over . . . the company's book value. Given current market conditions which find most U.S. companies—including Arcata—selling at multiples of 5 and 6, we believe this is an equitable and realistic valuation." (Deft. Exhibit X). On May 14, 1974, Thomas H. Saliba of Arthur D. Little, Inc., wrote that "I do have difficulty in understanding the 'asking price' when the book value of the parent Papercraft is approximately $32.8 million and the market value is roughly $30 million." (Govt. Exhibit CR. 11 at 1988). The evidence is thus clear that Papercraft must have been aware that even its $29,000,000 asking price was clearly unreasonable.

In addition, the FTC's staff continued to point out to Papercraft the fallacy of maintaining a high sale price, stating "although the reduction in price was a forward step, nevertheless it may be necessary for respondent to accept an even lower price in order to accomplish a divestiture of CPS without further undue delay." (Govt. Exhibit 34, Letter of March 1, 1974 from FTC staff attorney).

During this period of time and in order to demonstrate that the fair market value of CPS assets was in excess of the book value, Papercraft engaged Industrial Appraisal Company in Pittsburgh, one of the country's large appraisal firms, to determine market value. In September of 1974, Industrial Appraisal Company found the appraised value of the assets was $14,993,000.

We now come to the Arcata offer. Considerable negotiations were carried on throughout 1974, and in November of 1974 an offer of $13,000,000 was made, payable in large part with preferred stock at the rate of 8%. This offer was, of course, in the face of a sales demand price of $29,000,000, and Papercraft rejected the offer. Finally, in February of 1975, Papercraft lowered its asking price to $20,000,000. On March 31, 1975, Arcata made Papercraft an offer to purchase the stock of CPS for a net amount of $14.1 million, after forgiveness of $2.9 million owed Papercraft by CPS. At the time of the hearing in this proceeding on April 7, 1975, a letter of intent had been delivered comtemplating a definitive purchase agreement by May 1st. This has not, however, been accomplished.

During the years 1968 through 1974, Papercraft has reported total net income from CPS of $10,811,000 and during this same period Papercraft has received [423] dividends from CPS totaling $5,721,000. In the period of violation, since December 16, 1973, when divestiture was required by the Order, Papercraft has benefitted in excess of $2,500,000 or approximately $5,000 a day, based upon CPS' 1974 earnings.

John Kelsey, Vice President of BED, testified that the profit history of CPS was as follows: 1968-$842,000; 1969-$1,416,000; 1970-$1,406,000; 1971-$1,549,000; 1972-$1,739,000. [See also Deft. Exhibit A at p. 14]. In his opinion, the $37.5 million was "an appropriate price" even though it was more than twenty times earnings; even though the price of Papercraft stock, for example, on May 1, 1973 was $14—a price-earnings ratio of 8 to 1; even though any owner of CPS after divestiture would have to know that they would be in direct competition with Papercraft, who would vigorously compete in the gift wrap business. It is worth noting in passing that in 1972, 31.6% of Papercraft's profits came from CPS ($1.707 million out of a total $5.391 million).

One difficulty here is that after having agreed to a price of $37.5 million, no realistic effort was ever made by BED to weigh the market reaction to this price. All decisions thereafter were made by Papercraft, not based on the primary consideration of the illegal acquisition of CPS in 1967 or the Order to divest by December 16, 1973, but upon an attempt to get the highest possible sales price. Even in the face of continued market resistance to the asking price, no real effort was made to determine the validity of that asking price until the recent negotiation with Arcata at the $17 million figure.

Mr. Kelsey openly admitted that he wore "two hats" in the performance of his duties. As the representative of BED, he felt an obligation to the shareholders to get a "fair price" and at the same time, trying to face up to the responsibility to divest. Nowhere does he explain any reaction by Papercraft to the failure of the market to indicate interest at the $37.5 million mark, at the $29 million mark, or at any figure anywhere near thereto.

Howard Clark, First Vice President of BED, testified the $37.5 million asking price was "fair" and told of the hopeful negotiations which had been carried out with Swingline, Inc., only to receive notice in December of 1973 that CPS did not fit in with Swingline's plans. He denied that the asking price was of major concern to Swingline. On cross-examination, Clark admitted that the asking price for CPS was set by Papercraft's management and that the Kraftco offer of $25 million was not followed up by Papercraft. He admitted he had never read the FTC Opinion, nor at any place in his testimony did he indicate any understanding of the urgency of the Order to divest.

Joseph Katz, Chairman of the Board and President of Papercraft, told of stabilizing CPS' earnings after taxes through modernization of plant and various other cost saving devices whereby the earnings were as testified to by Kelsey. However, he added these approximations: 1973—$1,850,000; 1974—$2,002,000—a ratio of 10% of total sales after taxes and 20% before taxes.

Mr. Katz admitted that a sales price was developed at $37.5 million by Papercraft management, and then the investment banker was selected, whose analysis served to confirm the $37.5 million price. He acknowledged receipt of information concerning Kraftco's $25.5 million offer, to which he replied on May 18, 1973 that the price was too low.

In October of 1973, American Brands was interested enough to visit CPS in Tennessee, and was quoted the "asking price" of $37.5 million. Even though Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. further contacts were made in November and December, and there was a final rejection by American Brands, Joseph Katz would have this Court believe that the price had no effect on these considerations.

Mr. Katz spoke of the Borden situation where a cash offer of $20 million [424] was apparently made, which was not brought to his attention. In March of 1974, when Arcata originally contacted BED and gave "our concept of values" in the range of $12 to $12.5 million, Katz admitted he did not consider this a viable offer, but simply a "fishing expedition", and told BED no such price could be accepted. On cross-examination, Mr. Katz acknowledged price-earning ratios of various companies as follows: Beatrice Foods, 17 to 1; Clark, 17 to 1; Kraftco, 13 to 1; Liggett & Myers, 12 to 1; Norton-Simon, 17 to 1. He also acknowledged that as early as December of 1973, he was aware that the asking price based on the price-earnings ratio of 20 to 1 was too high, particularly in light of the fact that by September of 1973, no one had offered anything near the price. Even when the Arcata offer was made at $12 to $12.5 million, he testified "I thought it was a frivolous indication of an offer".

His son, Marshall Katz, a Vice President of Papercraft, handled much of the effort by Papercraft to divest CPS. Again, there was no indication whatsoever of consideration being given to the urgency of divestiture compared with the asking price of $37.5 million.

This Court finds that Papercraft's "asking price" was unreasonable and only discouraged inquirers without consideration of the unconditional divestiture requirement. Though the FTC had on numerous occasions brought this forcibly to Papercraft's attention, it was not until January of 1974, after the deadline for divestiture, that Papercraft allegedly "redoubled" its efforts to divest CPS possibly by lowering the price to $29 million. This was still unreasonably above any market interest generated up to that time. Finally Papercraft lowered its price to $20 million, but the entire course of conduct shows that Papercraft pursued a subjectively desired price in complete disregard of the Divestiture Order. As this Court previously held: "the Order suggests nothing to indicate that Papercraft's divestiture was to be affected by the price it would receive . . . [and] Defendant's bargaining position may well have been weakened by virtue of the Order, but its position was the product of Defendant's earlier violations of the antitrust laws." (Page 8 of Opinion on Motion for Partial Summary Judgment filed March 11, 1975).

In addition, as noted above, Papercraft failed to follow up the offer of Kraftco (through an intermediary) at $25.5 million, and the offer from Borden at $20 million, and the offer at $13 million by West Bend Company, a division of Dart Industries, Inc., and an offer of $15 million made by Wyomissing Corporation. In other instances, Papercraft rejected offers without indicating any willingness to reduce their asking price of $29 million. Undoubtedly, one of the effects of the artificially high price in the face of market resistance, was the discouraging of medium and small prospective inquirers. This effect was brought to Papercraft's attention as early as December 19, 1973 by the FTC staff member who wrote to Papercraft's attorneys that there was some disappointment that its efforts had focused only on "very large, broad based consumer products companies". (Govt. Exhibit 33). Furthermore, the FTC on March 1, 1974, pointed out to Papercraft that its use of the terms "selling price" and its statement that the price was to be "payable in cash", represented an inflexible position which was unacceptable "in that it tends to preclude interest and does not comport with the duty of respondent to accomplish the divestiture which is already overdue." (Govt. Exhibit 34).

It thus becomes apparent from the entire record before us that it was Papercraft's failure to realistically approach the subject of divestiture, and to take the necessary steps therefor within the six month period provided by the FTC Order, that gave rise to the necessity of the instant proceedings.

[425] Papercraft had the unconditional obligation to divest within six months, or as an alternative it could have used a spinoff to its shareholders as contemplated by Paragraph III of the FTC Order. However, Papercraft, deliberately disregarded the spinoff alternative, and devoted all of its attention to the sale to an acquirer. It was not until January of 1974, after the December 16, 1973 Divestiture Order deadline, that Papercraft initiated any substantial divestiture efforts. Had Papercraft, in the first six months after the effective date of the FTC Order, not persisted in its limited approach to large prospects, and its insistence on the avoidance of advertising, it seems possible that divestiture would have been entirely possible within the established time limitations. This possibility is evidenced by the fact that within six months from the first advertisement of CPS on January 8, 1974, Dart Industries, Inc., on June 28, 1974, made a substantial offer of $13 million. This offer was made despite the deterrent effect of Papercraft's price inflexibility. Its acceptance within the six month period would have provided the FTC with an opportunity to appraise Dart's qualifications as an acquirer. Wyomissing Corporation made its inquiry at $15 million on June 5, 1974, and this inquiry was quickly rejected. This establishes that Papercraft could have presented a divestiture proposal within the six month period prescribed by the FTC Order.

On the issue of good faith, it is apparent that Papercraft did not exercise that good faith which the Order required.

II. The Injury To The Public

[3] It is the major premise of the anti-trust laws that reduction of competition through illegal mergers is injurious to the public. Under the FTC's Opinion of June 30, 1971, it stated that Papercraft's acquisition of CPS affected or would probably affect competition in the following ways:

> ### V. Injury to Competition
> The acquisition involved in this proceeding is so far outside the pale of permissible combinations that, even if we accepted respondent's efforts to expand the universe figure to double or more the figure we believe to be reasonably correct and to place the two firms in question in separate "submarkets" of the overall gift-wrap field, we would still be constrained to enter an order restoring this acquired firm to its former status as a separate full-line gift-wrap producer. No matter how the product markets (or submarkets) might be defined, the facts still would remain, as noted, that the 1st and 2nd largest gift-wrap manufacturers have been combined into one; that the combination thus created is more than twice the size of the next-> largest competitor; that those two firms were the most likely entrants into all aspects of gift-wrap production; that the number of significant firms in the industry has been decreasing; that the trade expects this trend to continue, with only four significant firms ultimately remaining in the industry; and that there is no prospect for any new firms to enter the industry in the future. The case law simply does not sanction acquisitions of this kind. (citations omitted). [Govt. Exhibit 21 at p. 16]. (footnote omitted).

As previously noted, as long as Papercraft holds CPS, it benefits by an average profit of better than $5,000 a day. As discussed in the Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws (1955) (at p. 317):

> [Competition is valued] . . . (1) because the actual level of prices in competitive markets should in the short run more accurately reflect the influence of demand and of cost, and thus in the long run help guide the flow of capital and other resources toward the most productive possible uses; (2) because the goad of compe[426]tition provides powerful and pervasive incentives for product innovations and product development, and for long-run cost reduction, both through improved technology and improved management; . . . (3) because competitive conditions in business should lead to an equitable diffusion of the resulting real income among consumers and factors of production; and (4) . . . because the more flexible prices of competitive markets should make it easier and cheaper for the economy to adjust to industrial fluctuations. . . .

It is, therefore, apparent that to the extent that Papercraft profits from the retention of a lucrative subsidiary, it and other respondents in divestiture cases will be encouraged to delay divestiture ordered by the FTC. It is also apparent that civil penalties must take into account the extent to which the public has been harmed through the repression of competition and the profit which Papercraft has received is an indication of this harm.

IV. Papercraft's Ability To Pay

It is noted in the District Court Opinion in United States v. J. B. Williams Company, Inc., 354 F.Supp. 521, 548 (S.D.N.Y.1973) (at p. 548):

> The court believes it appropriate to consider the financial ability of defendants to pay the penalties demanded by the Government in Section 5(l) actions. While imposition of maximum penalties against a large corporation may amount to little more than a slap on the wrist, the same penalties may throw a small enterprise out of business. The severity of the sanction imposed necessarily depends on the ability of each particular defendant to pay whatever fines are assessed.

In the instant case, it is noted that CPS has earned $1,002,294 on sales of $20,739,017 in 1974. (Govt. Exhibit CR-20 at 4573). In addition, the Wall Street Journal reported on March 7, 1975 that Papercraft has earned $5.3 million in 1974 on sales of $82.8 million. There is a present ability to pay even to the maximum, penalties of $10,000 per day as set by the Act.

V. The Penalty To Be Applied

In the present action, the Government seeks penalties of $10,000 a day for Papercraft's "continuing failure or neglect to obey". The statute makes each day of such failure or neglect to divest under a final order a separate violation. The Defendant Papercraft took the position that in an action for civil penalties, only $5,000 a day could be assessed on an alleged violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended. But this assertion is in error as we have noted hereinabove.

[4] However, before coming to a conclusion as to the amount of the penalty to be assessed, we must first determine the time involved. Papercraft argues that no penalties may be assessed prior to March 29, 1974, the date that it claims it first received notice of finalization of the FTC Order. But this assertion is without merit because the Order is perfectly clear that divestiture was required by December 16, 1973. Penalties must, therefore, be assessed from that date. This point was recently stressed by the Eighth Circuit in the following comments which appear in United States v. Beatrice Foods, Co., supra, (at pp. 1265, 1266-1267, 1269):

> Beatrice argues that no penalty could be imposed before the FTC gave notice that Beatrice's conduct was in violation of the cease and desist order. Assessment of penalties for conduct occurring before such notice would, according to Beatrice, violate due process.
> We are thus satisfied that no notice is required under the statutes. How[427]ever, this does not resolve the constitutional challenge to the imposition of penalties before notice of violation is given. As indicated Beatrice asserts that notice was not given until the complaint was filed. On the other hand, the government's position is that the cease and desist order itself gives sufficient notice of what conduct is proscribed.
> We think the basic question necessarily turns on whether the order itself is sufficiently clear to place Beatrice on notice of the prohibited conduct. . . . Our examination satisfies us that the FTC decree . . . was in fact sufficiently precise in terminology to place Beatrice on notice of its wrongful action in its transactions with Maple Island Dairies. . . .

Thus, in each civil penalty case in which the "notice" argument was raised, the Court has flatly rejected it. United States v. J. B. Williams Company, Inc., supra; Federal Trade Commission v. Consolidated Foods Company, 1972—2 Trade Cas. ¶ 75,431 (S.D.N.Y.1974); United States v. Swingline, Inc., 371 F.Supp. 37, 45 (E.D.N.Y.1974).

This Court, therefore, holds that the civil penalty in this case is to be assessed beginning with December 17, 1973, and running through the date of this Order.

[5] This Court has carefully considered the teachings of Beatrice Foods (a penalty of $200 a day), and many other cases as set forth in United States v. Swingline, Inc., supra, at p. 46 (fixing penalties at various amounts, less than $10,000 a day). In considering Papercraft's financial ability to pay, and the harm caused by the delay, the degree of bad faith, and the benefit received by Papercraft, we do not think that the penalty assessed should be the maximum, however, it must be large enough to deter Papercraft and anyone else in the future from showing as little concern as Papercraft did for the need to meet the FTC timetable.

A penalty of $7,500 a day is determined to represent a fair consideration of all of the factors involved, for a total of $3,817,500.

INJUNCTION

[6] In addition to the civil penalties, injunctive relief for violations of FTC Orders is provided by Section 5(l) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(l):

> The United States district courts are empowered to grant mandatory injunctions and such other and further equitable relief as they deem appropriate in the enforcement of final orders of the Commission.

A consideration of the evidence presented in this case requires a careful balancing of the urgency of prompt compliance with the practicalities of developing a realistic plan for divestiture. After consideration of the details of many offers made to Papercraft, the extensive interest shown by many substantial corporations, and the results received from public advertising, it is the opinion of this Court that Papercraft must be required to submit a divestiture plan subject to approval by the FTC. It is further the opinion of the Court that such a plan can be developed for submission within sixty (60) days from the date of this Opinion and Order, and it will be so ordered.

The foregoing constitutes the Court's Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law as required by Rule 52(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

An appropriate Order will be entered.

F.T.C. v. NATIONAL COMMISSION ON EGG NUTRITION*

No. 74-2043. F.T.C. Docket No. 8987.

(United States Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, May 15, 1975)

1. NONPROFIT CORPORATION PROMOTING INTEREST IN EGG INDUSTRY FALLS WITHIN F.T.C. JURISDICTION.

Not-for-profit corporation which was organized to promote the general interests of the egg industry came within the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

2. STATEMENTS, BOTH PUBLISHED AND BROADCAST, MADE IN AN EFFORT TO ALLAY FEARS CONCERNING EGGS AND HIGH CHOLESTEROL, WERE "ADVERTISEMENT" UNDER F.T.C. ACT.

Published and broadcast statements, which were sponsored by not-for-profit corporation composed of representatives of various associations of egg producers and which were designed to allay fears of the public concerning relationship between consumption of eggs and high cholesterol were "advertisements" within Federal Trade Commission Act, as they were representations concerning the qualities of a product and promoting its purchase and use.

3. CONGRESS INDICATED INTENTION OF CONSIDERATION OF EQUITIES AND FTC'S LIKELIHOOD OF SUCCESS ONLY WHERE F.T.C. SEEKS INJUNCTION UNDER ITS GENERAL AUTHORITY NOT BECAUSE IT BELIEVES RESPONDENT IS DISSEMINATING MISLEADING ADVERTISING.

Congress has indicated an intention that considerations of equities and Federal Trade Commission's likelihood of ultimate success be applied only where Commission seeks to act under its general grant of authority to seek injunctions and not to those situations in which injunction is sought because Commission has reason to believe that corporation is engaged in disseminating misleading advertising intended to induce the purchase of items of food.

4. F.T.C. WAS ENTITLED TO TEMPORARY INJUNCTION WHERE IT DEMONSTRATED REASON TO BELIEVE THAT ADVERTISEMENTS WERE MATERIALLY MISLEADING AND WHERE IT SHOWED INJUNCTION WOULD BE IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST.

Where Federal Trade Commission demonstrated that it had reason to believe that advertisements sponsored by not-for-profit corporation composed of egg producer associations were materially misleading concerning relationship between egg consumption and cholesterol and where FTC showed that it believed that an injunction would be in the best interest of the public, FTC was entitled to temporary injunction against the advertisements without consideration of balance of equities or likelihood of ultimate success of the FTC.

5. IF GOVERNMENT SELECTIVELY SEEKS PROHIBITION OF ADVERTISEMENTS BECAUSE OF ESPOUSAL OF ONE SIDE OF GENUINE CONTROVERSY, FIRST AMENDMENT IS NOT WHOLLY IRRELEVANT.

First Amendment is not wholly irrelevant if government selectively seeks to prohibit commercial advertisements because they espouse one side of a genuine controversy.

6. TEMPORARY INJUNCTION DID NOT VIOLATE FIRST AMENDMENT RIGHTS OF RESPONDENT WHERE RESPONDENT DISSEMINATED FALSE OR MISLEADING ADVERTISING;

*Reported in 517 F. 2d 485 (1975); rehearing denied June 17, 1975; cert. denied 426 U.S. 919 (1976). For case before the Commission, see 88 F.T.C. 89. See also p. 1109 herein.

THERE IS NO CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO DISSEMINATE FALSE OR MISLEADING ADVERTISEMENTS.

Issuance of temporary injunction against continued advertisements, sponsored by not-for-profit corporation composed of egg producer associations, which espoused one side of controversy concerning relationship between egg consumption, cholesterol, and heart attacks, and which made statements denying the existence of scientific evidence contrary to its view, although such evidence clearly existed, did not violate First Amendment; there is no constitutional right to [487] disseminate false or misleading advertisements.

7. RESPONDENT WAS NOT PROHIBITED FROM STATING THAT THERE IS SCIENTIFIC EVIDENCE SUPPORTING THEORY THAT DIETARY CHOLESTEROL INTAKE IS NOT HARMFUL PROVIDED IT ALSO STATES THAT THERE IS SUBSTANTIAL CONTRARY EVIDENCE.

Temporary injunction against continuation of advertisements, which were sponsored by not-for-profit corporation formed by egg producer associations and which made misleading statements concerning relationship between egg consumption and cholesterol, should not go so far as to prohibit the association from making a fair presentation of its side of the controversy so long as it did not state that there was no scientific evidence relating egg consumption and cholesterol; association was entitled to state that there was scientific evidence supporting the theory that dietary cholesterol intake is not harmful provided that it also stated that there was substantial contrary evidence.

8. EVEN THOUGH EVIDENCE IN THE FORM OF RECENT ADVERTISING WAS NOT BEFORE THE DISTRICT COURT, APPELLATE COURT GRANTS MOTION FOR LEAVE TO SUPPLEMENT THE RECORD BECAUSE THE RECENT ADVERTISING BEARS ON NATURE OF PROVISIONS TO BE INCLUDED IN THE INJUNCTION.

Where Court of Appeals was framing temporary injunction against misleading advertisements and where recent advertising bore on the nature of the provisions which should be included in that injunction, Court would grant motion for leave to supplement the record with copies of the advertisements published by advertiser shortly before and after all argument in the Court of Appeals, even though the evidence was not before the district court.

On motion for appeal from district court denial of injunctive relief, appellate court held that (1) nonprofit corporation fell under F.T.C. jurisdiction; (2) statements disseminated were advertisements and were misleading; (3) where advertisements were misleading and dealt with food, court was not required to balance equities or consider likelihood of success; and (4) injunction did not violate First Amendment rights.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

Before FAIRCHILD, Chief Judge, and CUMMINGS and TONE, Circuit Judges.

TONE, Circuit Judge.

The National Commission on Egg Nutrition (NCEN), a private, not-for-profit corporation composed of representatives of various associations of egg producers throughout the United States, has caused to be published and broadcast statements, in the form of paid advertisements, representing in substance that there is no scientific evidence that eating eggs increases the risk of heart disease or a heart attack. The Federal Trade Commission filed an administrative complaint against NCEN alleging that these statements were false and in violation of sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 45 and 52, and sought from the District Court a temporary injunction under section 13(a) of the Act, 15 U.S.C. § 53(a), restraining the continuation of the advertising pending completion of the administrative proceeding. Before the District Court, the Commission offered substantial evidence that there is a medical controversy about the subject and considerable expert opinion based on experimental evidence showing a correlation, and possibly a causal connection, between high levels of dietary cholesterol resulting from eating eggs and other foods with a high cholesterol content and increased risk of heart disease. The District Court held that it had jurisdiction notwithstanding NCEN's claim that it was not subject to the Act, but denied the application on the ground that the equitable conditions required for issuance of an injunction under section 13(a) of the Act, 15 U.S.C. § 53(a), had not been met. We reverse that court's order and direct that an injunction be entered.

I.

[1,2] We agree with the District Court that the Commission had jurisdiction over NCEN and the statements in question. Although NCEN is a non-profit corporation, it was formed to promote "the general interests of the egg industry," according to its articles of incorporation and bylaws. Thus, it comes [488] within the scope of section 4 of the Act, 15 U.S.C. § 44, which defines "corporation" as "any company . . . which is organized to carry on business for its own profit or that of its members . . . ." See Community Blood Bank of Kansas City Area, Inc. v. F.T.C., 405 F.2d 1011 (8th Cir. 1969), where the court interpreted the legislative history of this section, stating:

> . . . Congress did not intend to provide a blanket exclusion of all nonprofit corporations, for it was also aware that corporations ostensibly organized not-for-profit, such as trade associations, were merely vehicles through which a pecuniary profit could be realized for themselves or their members. 405 F.2d at 1017.

In holding that the Blood Bank was a solely charitable enterprise, the Eighth Circuit distinguished the line of cases following F.T.C. v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 68 S.Ct. 793, 92 L.Ed. 1010 (1948), and

Fashion Originators' Guild of America v. F.T.C., 312 U.S. 457, 61 S.Ct. 703, 85 L.Ed. 949 (1941), explaining:

> It is evident, however, that the organizations in the above cases were designed to and did in fact bring together firms having common business concerns and such organizations or their members derived a profit over and above the ability to perpetuate or maintain their existence. 405 F.2d at 1019.

See also National Harness Mfrs.' Ass'n v. F.T.C., 268 F. 705 (6th Cir. 1920). In the instant case, there is sufficient evidence to support the District Court's finding that NCEN was organized for the profit of the egg industry, even though it pursues that profit indirectly. The clear purpose of the statements in issue in this case is to encourage the consumption of eggs by allaying fears the public may have about their high cholesterol content. Also, given the nature of the pronouncements in question, the District Court could properly conclude that they were advertisements within the meaning of that term as used in the Act, because they were representations concerning the qualities of a product and promoting its purchase and use. See Koch v. F.T.C., 206 F.2d 311, 317-318 (6th Cir. 1953); compare Scientific Mfg. Co. v. F.T.C., 124 F.2d 640, 643-645 (3rd Cir. 1941).

II.

As the District Court recognized, the Commission invoked section 13(a) as the basis for the issuance of a temporary injunction. We now turn, therefore, to the showing the Commission must make in order to receive injunctive relief under that subsection.

Section 13 of the Act consists of two different grants of authority to the Commission to seek injunctions against violations of the Act. Section 13(a) provides in substance that "[w]henever the Commission has reason to believe" that a corporation is engaged in dissemination of materially misleading advertising intended to induce the purchase of items of food, in violation of section 12 of the Act, and further has reason to believe that enjoining that conduct "would be to the interest of the public," the Commission is authorized to bring suit in a federal district court for injunctive relief, and "[u]pon [a] proper showing a temporary injunction . . . shall be granted . . . ." By contrast, section 13(b) is a general grant of authority to seek injunctions "[w]henever the Commission has reason to believe . . . that any . . . corporation . . . is violating . . . any provision of law enforced by the Federal Trade Commission," and provides that "[u]pon a proper showing that, weighing the equities and considering the Commission's likelihood of ultimate success, such action would be in the public interest, . . . a preliminary injunction may be granted." (Emphasis added.)

the above quota[489]tion and the permissive "may" in (b), while leaving (a) without those standards and with its peremptory "shall," Congress indicated an intention that those standards be applied in proceedings under (b) but not in those under (a), and no intention that the judicial interpretations of (a) should be affected by the amendment. This inference is not refuted by the somewhat ambiguous legislative history of the amendment. Accordingly, our decision in F.T.C. v. Rhodes Pharmacal Co., 191 F.2d 744 (7th Cir. 1951), remains the law and is controlling in this case. We there held that the following standard was applicable under subsection (a):

> . . . all the Commission had to show was a justifiable basis for believing, derived from reasonable inquiry or other credible information, that such a state of facts probably existed as reasonably would lead the Commission to believe that the defendants were engaged in the dissemination of false advertisements . . . in violation of the Act . . . . This is to say, in the instant case, the court had only to resolve the narrow issue of whether there was "reasonable cause" to believe that the alleged violation had taken place. 191 F.2d at 747-748.

[4] Under this standard, the Commission in the case at bar was entitled to temporary injunctive relief against NCEN's advertising statements to the effect that there was "no scientific evidence" of any relationship between dietary cholesterol intake resulting from eating eggs and increased risk of heart disease. The District Court explicitly found that the Commission had demonstrated that it had reason to believe NCEN's advertisements to be materially misleading. The Commission also showed that it believed an injunction would be in the best interest of the public, a statement which the District Court credited to the extent that more people were likely to be misled if the pronouncements were permitted to continue. It was error for the District Court to go further than the statutory requirements, which had been satisfied according to Rhodes, by requiring the Commission to justify its request for an injunction on the basis of a balancing of the equities and the likelihood of ultimate success, the traditional equity standards prescribed in subsection (b).

III.

[5,6] NCEN argues that the issuance of an injunction would at least raise a serious First Amendment question. As Chief Judge Fairchild's concurring opinion suggests, the First Amendment is not "wholly irrelevant if government selectively seeks to prohibit commercial advertising because it espoused one side of a genuine controversy." Cf. Pittsburgh Press Co. v. Human Relations Commission, 413 U.S. 376, 384-389, 93 S.Ct. 2553, 37 L.Ed.2d 669 (1973); Barrick Realty, Inc. v. City of Gary, 491 F.2d 161, 163-164 (7th Cir. 1974); compare Breard v. Alexandria, 341 U.S. 622, 71 S.Ct. 920, 95 L.Ed. 1233 (1951). NCEN has done more than espouse one side of a genuine controversy, however. It has made statements denying the existence of scientific evidence which the record clearly shows does exist. These statements are, therefore, false and misleading. "There is no constitutional right to disseminate false or misleading advertisements." E. F. Drew & Co. v. F.T.C., 235 F.2d 735, 740 (2d Cir. 1956). The First Amendment problem suggested above is therefore not before us.

IV.

[7,8] Regardless of the reach of the First Amendment in this area, we think the injunction should not go so far as to prohibit NCEN from making a fair presentation of its side of the controversy. NCEN should, as the Commission contends, be enjoined from disseminating in commerce or by mail advertising containing statements to the effect that there is no scientific evidence that increased intake of dietary cholesterol resulting from eating eggs increases the [490] risk of heart disease or attendant or related conditions or other statements tending to misrepresent the state of scientific evidence on the subject in question. The injunction should not, however, prohibit NCEN from stating that there is scientific evidence supporting the theory that dietary cholesterol intake is not harmful, or from describing that evidence, provided that it also states that there is substantial contrary evidence.

In order to avoid further delay, we are directing that an injunction in the form appearing in the Appendix to this opinion* be entered by the District Court on remand.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

FAIRCHILD, Chief Judge (concurring).

The material involved consists of statements of position with respect to a controversial issue. It is deemed advertising because its dissemination is caused by those whose profit interests are served by the view espoused.

We are in an area of difficulty in considering whether and to what extent the First Amendment protects such material. It is clear that "purely commercial advertising" is treated differently from other communication of information and opinion in terms of applicability of the First Amendment. Valentine v. Chrestensen, 316 U.S. 52, 62 S.Ct. 920, 86 L.Ed. 1262 (1942). Compare, Pittsburgh Press Co. v. Human Rel. Comm'n., 413 U.S. 376, 384, 93 S.Ct. 2553, 37 L.Ed.2d 669 (1973) with New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 266, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686 (1964). See also, Breard v. Alexandria, 341 U.S. 622, 71

* NCEN has moved for leave to supplement the record with copies of advertisements published by it shortly before and after the oral argument in this court. While we would ordinarily not consider evidence that was not before the District Court, we grant the motion, because we are framing the temporary injunction, and the recent advertising bears on the nature of the provisions that should be included in that injunction.

S.Ct. 920, 95 L.Ed. 1233 (1951). I question whether the cases mean that the First Amendment is wholly irrelevant if government selectively seeks to prohibit commercial advertising because it espoused one side of a genuine controversy.

Mr. Justice Brennan has recently observed:

> . . . while it is possible that commercial advertising may be accorded less First Amendment protection than speech concerning political and social issues of public importance, compare Valentine v. Chrestensen, 316 U.S. 52, 62 S.Ct. 920, 86 L.Ed. 1262 (1942), with Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147, 60 S.Ct. 146, 84 L.Ed. 155 (1939), and Breard v. City of Alexandria, 341 U.S. 622, 71 S.Ct. 920, 95 L.Ed. 1233 (1951), with Martin v. City of Struthers, 319 U.S. 141, 63 S.Ct. 862, 87 L.Ed. 1313 (1943), it is "speech" nonetheless, often communicating information and ideas found by many persons to be controversial. Lehman v. City of Shaker Heights, 418 U.S. 298, 314, 94 S.Ct. 2714, 2723, 41 L.Ed.2d 770 (Brennan, J., dissenting) (Emphasis in original, footnote omitted).

Like political speech, the purveyor of a commercial advertisement has an interest in expression, and the mere fact that government seeks to regulate advertising bespeaks the interest the recipients have in receiving the message. See Note, Freedom of Expression in a Commercial Context, 78 Harv.L.Rev. 1191 (1965). Most importantly, society, as a whole, has a substantial interest in the free interplay of opinion when an advertisement addresses a matter of current public debate.

When we are dealing with a genuine controversy, I do not think that mere reason to believe that a statement is false or misleading is a sufficient basis for an injunction. I conclude that the First Amendment at least requires a higher standard. I can, however, concur in ordering a limited injunction in this [491] case because I consider that it has been demonstrated that the particular statements enjoined are misleading.

APPENDIX

INJUNCTION ORDER

Petitioner, the Federal Trade Commission, having invoked the authority of this court pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 53(a) for the purpose of temporarily enjoining the respondent from disseminating advertisements which the Commission has reason to believe violate section 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 52; the court hereby finds as follows:

The court has jurisdiction over the subject matter and the respondent.

Eggs are a "food" as defined by 15 U.S.C. § 55(b).

The Federal Trade Commission has made a proper showing that it has reason to believe that the respondent's advertisements for eggs which have been disseminated in commerce or through the United States mails were false in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 52.

The Federal Trade Commission has made a proper showing that the issuance of a temporary injunction against respondent's continued dissemination of advertisements which the Commission had reason to believe were false, pending completion of its administrative proceeding with respect to respondent, would be in the public interest.

It is therefore ordered that respondent, National Commission on Egg Nutrition, is forthwith enjoined from disseminating or causing the dissemination of any advertisement by means of the United States mails or by any means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, which directly or indirectly:

1. Represents that there is no scientific evidence that consuming eggs, even in large quantities, increases the risk of heart attacks, heart or artery disease, or any attendant condition;
2. It is further ordered that respondent shall:

Distribute or mail a copy of this order, within 30 days from the date of this order, to each of its members and to all persons, corporations, associations or other entities to which it has provided advertising materials for publication or republication and which contain any of the claims which respondent is enjoined by this order from making;

Furnish petitioner, within 30 days from the date of this order, with a list of all members, persons, corporations or other entities to whom it has furnished copies of this order as required above; and Notify the Commission at least 30 days prior to any proposed change in NCEN, such as dissolution, emergence of a successor corporation, or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance with obligations arising out of this order.

This order shall continue in effect until the pending complaint against respondent by petitioner Federal Trade Commission (F.T.C. Docket No. 8987) is either dismissed by petitioner or until a [492] final order issued by petitioner against respondent in that matter becomes final as defined by section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, unless sooner vacated or modified by this court.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. GLEN E. JORGENSEN and C.I.T. FINANCIAL CORPORATION*

Misc. No. 75-46. F.T.C. File No. 99-226.

(United States District Court for the District of Columbia, May 15, 1975)

Memorandum-Order

This matter is before the Court on the Federal Trade Commission's petition for an order requiring respondents: 1) to appear, testify and produce records and documentary evidence and 2) to provide petitioner access to specified files located at particular places. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) seeks this order pursuant to its own subpoena duces tecum and order requiring access issued in the course of an FTC nonpublic investigation.[1] The respondents have filed an answer to the petition and have also moved for summary judgment.[2]

Respondents contend first that the FTC is here seeking to exceed its lawful powers. The administrative orders herein were issued pursuant to an investigation under the so-called Truth-in-Lending Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1601 et seq. It is undisputed that the FTC is the agency charged with overall enforcement of the Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1607(c). It is also undisputed that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve

* Not otherwise reported.

[1] The subpoena and order requiring access were issued pursuant to the authority of the FTC under the Truth-in-Lending Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1601, 1607. The FTC resolution authorizing the subpoena stated the nature and scope of the investigation to be as follows:

> To determine whether certain unnamed direct loan finance companies may be engaged in violation of the Truth in Lending Act and whether they may be engaged in unfair and deceptive acts or practices in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act including misrepresenting whether credit insurance is in truth and in fact voluntarily purchased by consumers.

Resolution Directing Use of Compulsory Process in Nonpublic Investigation, FTC File No. 712 3064 (filed July 23, 1974).

The subpoena required production of records regarding extension of consumer credit by C.I.T. Financial Corp. and its subsidiaries. Requested were articles of incorporation, annual reports, books and records of 1973 transactions, manuals and other materials in use in October and November, 1973, giving instructions to employees in such transactions, a list of names and addresses of customers who requested cancellation of insurance from January 1, 1973, to August 1, 1974, and a list of certain former employees of C.I.T. Financial Corp. and its subsidiaries. The access order required C.I.T. Financial Services Co. to make available the individual files containing personal loan contracts entered into during the period October-December, 1973.

[2] That motion is filed pursuant to the claim of respondents that the FTC is not entitled to seek a summary proceeding in this Court. Instead, say respondents, a full plenary proceeding must be had with complaint, answer and opportunity for discovery. This view is without merit. A summary proceeding suffices. United States v. Bell, 448 F.2d 40 (9th Cir. 1971); United States v. Gajewski, 419 F.2d 1088 (8th Cir. 1969), cert. denied 397 U.S. 1040 (1970); Venn v. United States, 400 F.2d 207 (5th Cir. 1968); Wild v. United States, 362 F.2d 206 (9th Cir. 1966); McGarry's, Inc. v. Rose, 344 F.2d 416 (1st Cir. 1965); United States v. Associated Merchand. Corp., 256 F. Supp. 318 (S.D.N.Y. 1966); FTC v. Sherry, ¶ 72,906 [1969] Trade Cases at 87,453-55 (D.D.C. 1969); FTC v. Gallo, ¶ 74,740 [1973-2] Trade Cases at 95,242-43 (D.D.C. 1973). Accord Donaldson v. United States, 400 U.S. 517, 529 (1971).

System (the Board) is the sole agency empowered to prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of the Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1605. Respondents contend that the FTC is attempting to make regulations under the Act and that it is without power to do so.[3]

Pursuant to its powers under the Act, the Board has issued certain regulations, including one known as "Regulation Z." 12 C.F.R. § 226.1 et seq. That regulation states that the charges for credit insurance shall be deemed to be part of the finance charge unless: 1) the insurance is not required by the creditor and this fact is clearly disclosed in writing to the consumer; 2) any consumer requesting coverage gives specific dated and signed affirmative written indication thereof after written disclosure of the cost of the insurance.[4] Respondents contend that their loan contract forms clearly meet the terms of Regulation Z and that no more may be required of them. According to respondents, any FTC inquiry seeking to explore company practices in regard to the utilization of the form[5] would impose a requirement beyond the scope of Regulation Z. Respondents contend that this would permit the FTC to create "ad hoc regulations," something which is assertedly beyond the FTC's powers. The argument of respondents is not persuasive. Regulation Z would be meaningless indeed if its requirements could be met in form and ignored or overridden in practice. An inquiry into actual practice is therefore appropriate.

Respondents also contend that the FTC investigatory resolution, authorizing compulsory process is vague and indefinite and fails to indicate the scope of inquiry. Mere official curiosity or desire to determine whether the law is being violated is enough to justify use of a subpoena.[6] The subpoena is enforceable if the inquiry is within agency authority, the demand is not too indefinite and the information sought is reasonably relevant.[7] Since, as has been seen, the FTC is responsible for overall enforcement of the Truth-in-Lending Act, the inquiry is within agency authority. The demand is quite specific and the items sought are reasonably relevant. The Court thinks that the FTC investigatory resolution, quoted supra,[8] sufficiently states the nature and scope of the investigation.[9]

[3] At first respondents contended that the FTC sought to issue actual and explicit regulations in this matter. It relied essentially on certain press releases which indicated that a new rule might eventually result from this investigation. This, of course, might mean no more than that FTC intended to use its investigative results to persuade the Board to issue a new regulation. The FTC disclaims any intention whatsoever to issue its own regulations, an action which would concededly be beyond its power. Perhaps recognizing its inherent weakness, respondents largely abandoned this argument at the hearing of this matter.

[5] It is the intention of the FTC to examine the practices of respondents in connection with the sale of credit insurance in consumer loan transactions. See Memorandum In Support of Petition for Order at 10 (filed herein on April 3, 1975).

[8] See supra, note 1.

Finally, respondents contend that the instant subpoena and order are unduly burdensome and unnecessary since they are allegedly duplicative of a prior subpoena issued in 1973. That earlier subpoena apparently resulted in the turning over of some 20,000 documents by respondents to FTC. Moreover, respondents contend that the instant subpoena violates an agreement between them and the FTC regarding how much documentation they would be required to produce. The FTC has taken a number of steps to insure, so far as it can, that respondents are not burdened with producing materials which have already been produced.[10] The FTC also asserts, and it is not seriously contravened, that the agreement between it and respondents related to another investigatory file altogether. In these circumstances, the Court does not find the instant subpoena or access order to be burdensome.

Accordingly, it is by the Court this 15th day of May, 1975,

ORDERED that respondents' motion for summary judgment be, and it is hereby, denied; and it is further ORDERED that respondents Glen E. Jorgensen and C.I.T. Financial Corporation appear before a duly designated representative of petitioner at a time and place in the District of Columbia to be designated by petitioner upon not less than five (5) days' notice, and then and there to testify and produce books, papers and documents requested in the subpoena duces tecum issued by the FTC on August 5, 1974, as amended by the FTC's letter dated December 2, 1974, to counsel for C.I.T. Financial Corporation; and it is further ORDERED that respondent C.I.T. Financial Corporation grant, at a time designated by petitioner upon not less than five (5) days' notice, access to duly authorized agents of the FTC at the places of business of its operating subsidiary, C.I.T. Financial Services Co., Inc., listed in the order requiring access issued by the FTC on July 23, 1974, for the purposes stated therein; and it is further ORDERED that a certified copy of this Order be served forthwith upon respondents Glen E. Jorgensen and C.I.T. Financial Corporation by the United States Marshal.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. CONSOLIDATED FOODS CORPORATION*

Civ. A. No. 74 Civ. 3094. F.T.C. Docket No. C-2454.

(United States District Court, Southern District of New York, May 21, 1975)

1. FINDING THAT RESPONDENT WAS IN VIOLATION OF F.T.C. ORDER OVER A 94 DAY PERIOD WAS NOT TANTAMOUNT TO FINDING RESPONDENT COMMITTING 94 SEPARATE VIOLATIONS.

Finding that corporation was in violation of Federal Trade Commission order between November 26, 1973 and March 1, 1974, made on Commission's motion for partial summary judgment in action to hold corporation in contempt for violation of order, was not tantamount to a finding that corporation was in violation of order for each of such 94 days, for purposes of assessing penalty against corporation under "continuing" violation provisions of Clayton Act and Federal Trade Commission Act.

2. SEPARATELY IDENTIFIABLE ACTS OF PRICE DISCRIMINATION NULLIFIED THE "CONTINUING" VIOLATION PROVISIONS OF THE F.T.C. AND CLAYTON ACTS.

"Continuing" violation provisions of Clayton Act and Federal Trade Commission Act were not applicable in determining penalties for violation of Commission order prohibiting price discrimination by means of illegal discounts in that granting of each illegal discount was wholly independent and separately identifiable act which ended as soon as specific transaction was consummated.

3. COURT WOULD, IN LIGHT OF CASE'S CIRCUMSTANCES, USE AFFIDAVITS INSTEAD OF HEARINGS TO TAKE JUDICIAL NOTICE OF A CONTINUING PATTERN OF VIOLATIONS NECESSITATING PENALTY ACTION.

Even though a hearing would ordinarily be necessary to determine how many separate violations defendant had committed of Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting price discrimination by means of illegal discounts and how much penalty to impose for each violation, in light of circumstances of case, court would not schedule such a hearing but, on basis of affidavits, would take judicial notice that there was a continuing pattern of violation which necessarily gave rise to sufficient number of individual incidents to justify a penalty.

4. RESPONDENT'S CONTENTION OF NEW COMPETITION WAS NOT A BASIS FOR MITIGATION OF PENALTIES.

Contention that corporation was faced not only with new competition from existing competitors but with new competitors offering new and lower prices to its customers after Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting corporation from engaging in price discrimination by use of illegal discounts had become final could not serve as basis for mitigating penalties to be imposed upon corporation for violations of order, where situations described by corporation, although new, did not involve circumstances different from those in existence prior to order.

5. WILFULNESS OF VIOLATION, GOOD OR BAD FAITH TO COMPLY WITH ORDER, PUBLIC HARM, RESPONDENT'S PROFIT FROM NON-COMPLIANCE AND ABILITY TO PAY PENALTIES ARE GROUNDS FOR DETERMINING AMOUNT OF PENALTY TO BE ASSESSED.

Amount of penalties to be assessed for violation of Federal Trade Commission order is to be determined by taking into account the willfulness of violation or the good or bad faith of defendant in meeting its obligation to comply with order, defendant's ability to pay penalties, degree of harm to public caused by defendant's failure to comply and extent to which defendant may have profited by failing or delaying to comply.

* Reported in 396 F.Supp. 1353 (1975). See also, p. 1147 herein. For case before the Commission, see 83 F.T.C. 463.

6. NECESSITY OF VINDICATING COMMISSION'S AUTHORITY IS FACTOR TO CONSIDER IN ASSESSING PENALTIES.

Factor to be considered in determining penalty to be assessed for violation of Federal Trade Commission order is the necessity of vindicating the Commission's authority.

7. LACKING PLENARY POWER TO ENFORCE ITS ORDERS, F.T.C. MUST RELY ON FEDERAL DISTRICT COURTS.

Federal Trade Commission has no plenary power to enforce its own orders; thus, it must enlist aid of federal district courts for that purpose.

8. EVIDENCE ESTABLISHED RESPONDENT'S FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH ORDER WAS NOT WILLFUL OR IN BAD FAITH.

Evidence, in proceeding by Federal Trade Commission to determine penalties to be imposed for violation of order prohibiting price discrimination by use of illegal discounts, established that corporation's failure to comply with order was not willful or in bad faith.

9. DETERIORATING FINANCIAL CONDITION OF CORPORATION COULD BE CONSIDERED IN MITIGATION OF PENALTIES BUT DID NOT EXCUSE PAYMENT OF PENALTIES.

Fact that corporation which violated Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting price discrimination by use of illegal discounts was in deteriorating financial condition did not excuse corporation's payment of penalties for violation of order but could be considered in mitigation.

10. $25,000 MINIMUM PENALTY IMPOSED IN VINDICATION OF F.T.C.'S AUTHORITY.

Penalty of $25,000 should be imposed upon corporation which violated Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting price discrimination by use of illegal discounts, which did not act in bad faith in failing to comply with order, which was in deteriorating financial condition and which had not profited by noncompliance.

11. IN LIGHT OF LACK OF BAD FAITH, INJUNCTION COMMANDING OBEDIENCE WITH ORDER WAS NOT JUSTIFIED.

Injunction commanding corporation's obedience to Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting price discrimination by use of illegal discounts was not justified, in light of corporation's lack of bad faith in not complying with order and ongoing settlement negotiations between corporation and Commission.

On proceeding to assess penalties, court held "continuing" violation provisions were not applicable; financial deterioration did not excuse payment of penalties; $25,000 would be assessed in penalties; and injunction was unjustified considering ongoing settlement negotiations.

Injunction denied, judgment accordingly.

Memorandum and Order

[1355] On December 16, 1974, this Court on plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment found defendant "to have been in violation of the [Federal Trade Commission] order between November 26, 1973 and March 1, 1974." 396 F.Supp. 1344 at 1352 (S.D.N.Y.1974). Having determined liability, the issue of penalties remains. Plaintiff seeks civil penalties of at least $250,000 and an injunction commanding obedience to its Order. Defendant has requested a hearing on the issue, at which it proposes to demonstrate that only nominal penalties in the amount of $1.00 should be assessed and that no injunction is warranted.

The applicable statutes[1] entrust to the Court's discretion—within the upper limit of $5,000 for each violation[2]—the amount of the civil penalties to be imposed for noncompliance with final FTC orders. United States v. Ancorp National Services, Inc. (2d Cir. 1975) 516 F.2d 198, at 202; United States v. J. B. Williams Company, Inc. (2d Cir. 1974) 498 F.2d 414, 438. Section 11(l) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 21(l), provides as follows:

> Any person who violates any order issued by the commission or board under subsection (b) after such order has become final, and while such order is in effect, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $5,000 for each violation, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States. Each separate violation of any such order shall be a separate offense, except that in the case of a violation through continuing failure or neglect to obey a final order of the commission or board each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense.

[1,2] It is the plaintiff's position that substantial penalties are warranted by defendant's alleged "continuing failure or neglect to obey" its final order. It argues that this Court's finding—on the motion for partial summary judgment—that defendant was "in violation of the order between November 26, 1973 and March 1, 1974" was tantamount to a finding that defendant was in violation of the order for each of the 94 days of [1356] that time period.[3] Such was not our intention. Our focus on the motion for summary judgment was on whether there was any question of fact as to whether defendants had taken necessary steps to comply between November 1, 1973 and March 1, 1974, whereas now we must determine how many specific violations were committed. Moreover, the very language of the "continuing" violation provision and the interpretation given thereto by the courts preclude its application to the facts of this case. As the Supreme Court recently observed in United States v. ITT Continental Baking Co. (1975) 420 U.S. 223, 95 S.Ct. 926, 43 L.Ed.2d 148, this provision

[1] 15 U.S.C. §§ 21(l) and 45(l).

[2] Section 5(l) of the Federal Trade Commission Act [15 U.S.C. § 45(l)] was amended as of November 16, 1973—ten days before the FTC order in the instant case became final—to enlarge the maximum penalty from $5,000 to $10,000 per violation. Plaintiff, however, has elected to proceed under the old $5,000 provision.

[3] If this were true, defendant would be liable for a maximum of $470,000.

> . . . intended to assure that the penalty provisions would provide a meaningful deterrence against violations whose effect is continuing and whose detrimental effect could be terminated or minimized by the violator at some time after initiating the violation. (emphasis in original)

As examples of behavior intended to be covered by this provision, the court listed continuing conspiracies to fix prices or control production, maintenance of a billboard in defiance of an order prohibiting false advertising, failure to dissolve an unlawful merger, failure to eliminate an interlocking directorate and the acquisition of assets of other companies in violation of an order. Id. at 95 S.Ct. 926. Each of these types of violation necessarily continue on a day-to-day basis until a specific act is taken in abatement. On the other hand, in a situation involving price discrimination by means of illegal discounts—which by definition are individual in nature—each discriminatory transaction or sale must be the measure, since the granting of each illegal discount is a wholly independent and separately identifiable act which ends as soon as the specific transaction is consummated.

[3] Having concluded that penalties cannot be assessed on a "continuing" violation basis we turn now to the question whether or not to hold a hearing as to how many separate violations of the order defendant committed and how much of a penalty to impose for each of those violations. Although ordinarily such a hearing would be necessary, in light of the peculiar circumstances of this case, I have determined not to schedule one. On the basis of defendant's own affidavits, the court can take judicial notice that there was a continuing pattern of violation which necessarily gave rise to a sufficient number of individual incidents to justify the penalty which it has determined to assess.

[4] In mitigation, defendant has raised the very interesting but belated argument that since the FTC order became final, not only was Conso faced with new competition from existing competitors but it was also faced with new competitors offering new and lower prices to its customers. As a result, defendant argues, it was forced to continue to grant discounts to its customers in an effort to retain their business in the face of the competition from new sources. Although evidence of such events was obviously not "available" to defendant prior to the entry of the FTC order [see F.T.C. v. Ruberoid Co. (1952) 343 U.S. 470, 476, 72 S.Ct. 800, 96 L.Ed. 1081], that is not the end of our inquiry. The Court very carefully indicated in Ruberoid (at 476, 72 S.Ct. at 804) that the post-order defense of meeting competition could only come into being if the defendant could demonstrate the existence of "a new competitive situation involving different circumstances" (emphasis supplied). The facts of the instant case do not satisfy this test, for although the situations described by defendant in its affidavits may be "new", they are no "different" in legal effect than before.

[5-7] The amount of penalties to be assessed in a case of this nature is normally determined by taking into account the following factors: (1) the wilful[1357]ness of the violation, or the good or bad faith of the defendant in meeting its obligation to comply with the order, (2) the ability of the defendant to pay the penalties, (3) the degree of harm to the public caused by defendant's failure to comply, and (4) the extent to which defendant may have profited by failing or delaying to comply. United States v. J. B. Williams Company, Inc., supra, 498 F.2d at 438; United States v. Swingline, Inc. (E.D.N.Y.1974) 371 F.Supp. 37, 46. One final factor implicit in all compliance actions and one which is particularly relevant to the instant action—is the necessity of vindicating the authority of the Federal Trade Commission. Since the Commission has no plenary power to enforce its own orders, it must enlist the aid of the federal district courts for that purpose. The penalty to be assessed must therefore be a significant one.

[8] Contrary to the plaintiff's assertion that defendant's failure to comply with its order was wilful and in bad faith, it is quite clear to the court that such was not the case. Defendant's reliance upon post-order defenses as to the availability of which there is a "substantial ground for difference of opinion"[4] cannot be deemed to have been wilful or in bad faith.

[9] In support of its argument for the assessment of nominal penalties only, defendant points to the deteriorating financial condition of its Conso Products Company Division—the real target of this action. As a result of its increasing losses—many of which it claims are directly linked to the market's reaction to the FTC order—defendant contends that it is financially unable to pay anything more than a nominal penalty. Be that as it may, the threatened financial position of a division of a company (albeit the division which is the subject of this order) cannot excuse payment of penalties by the company itself—the named defendant in this action.

With respect to the third factor to be considered—that of the degree of harm to the public caused by defendant's failure to comply—plaintiff has conceded that such a factor is not really relevant in a price discrimination case of this nature. Unlike the situation in United States v. J. B. Williams Co., Inc., supra, this case does not involve a consumer protection-oriented order where noncompliance would directly injure the public. Rather, orders such as in the instant case—are "inherently business—or competition—oriented matters and do not directly concern consumer protection considerations." Plaintiff's brief. at 8.

Finally, as to whether defendant may have benefited from its noncompliance, the record indicates that the opposite is true.

[10,11] It is apparent, therefore, that of the five factors to be considered in determining the amount of penalty to assess, only that of the vindication of the Commission's authority is here pertinent. As to that factor no evidentiary hearing is necessary. In my judgment and based on the record before me, I have concluded to impose a penalty of $25,000, which amount is the minimum necessary to vindicate the Commission's authority in light of the seriousness of the matter involved. In addition, in light of our finding of good faith, the stepped up efforts of Conso's new management and the ongoing settlement negotiations between the parties, an injunction would not at this time be justified.

In summary, a penalty in the amount of $25,000 is assessed, and the motion for an injunction is denied without prejudice to a new motion based upon a showing that defendant is not acting in good faith.

So ordered.

No. 75-1465. F.T.C. Docket No. 8908.

(United States Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, May 29, 1975)

1. EVEN ASSUMING PLAINTIFFS ESTABLISHED THEIR RIGHT TO DOCUMENT UNDER F.O.I.A., INJUNCTION WOULD NOT BE GRANTED SINCE COURT COULD FASHION REMEDY AFTER NORMAL STATUTORY PROCEDURES.

Plaintiffs-appellants would not be granted injunction pending appeal to restrain FTC from proceeding further until plaintiffs-appellants had adequate opportunity to pursue their remedies under Freedom of Information Act, even assuming that plaintiffs could establish their right to requested document and that document had been used in manner denying them fair and impartial hearing, since court could fashion remedy after normal statutory procedures had been pursued and in view of presumption that Commission would deal fairly.

2. TIME WAS INADEQUATE TO ASSEMBLE A PANEL OF JUDGES NECESSITATING DENIAL OF EMERGENCY MOTION FOR INJUNCTION BY SINGLE APPELLATE COURT JUDGE.

Single judge of Court of Appeals denied emergency motion for injunction pending appeal, filed on afternoon of day before oral argument was scheduled, where there was inadequate time to assemble a panel.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 517 F.2d 1013.)

On request for motion for injunctive relief to restrain the F.T.C. from providing in its adjudicative case until plaintiffs-appellants had opportunity to pursue their remedies under F.O.I.A., Judge Stevens, as a single judge, denied emergency injunction on grounds that even if document was used in a manner denying them fair and impartial hearing, court could fashion remedy after normal statutory procedures.

ORDER[1]

[1014] [1] At approximately 4:00 o'clock p. m. on May 28, 1975, plaintiffs-appellants filed in this court an "Emergency Motion for Injunction Pending Appeal" in which they sought to restrain the Federal Trade Commission from proceeding further in its Docket No. 8908 until after plaintiffs-appellants had an adequate opportunity to pursue their remedies under the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. § 552) in connection with a request for a copy of the Commission memorandum entitled "Analytical Program Guide for the Direct Selling Industry" dated July 28, 1972. Having considered plaintiffs' motion and the memorandum in support thereof filed in the district court, and the Commission's memorandum in opposition which was filed in that court, I have decided to deny the motion.

There is no need to issue an extraordinary writ in order to preserve the jurisdiction of the court of appeals ultimately to review the merits of either (a) the basic Commission proceeding against plaintiffs, or (b) the merits of plaintiffs' Freedom of Information Act claim which, as I understand the record, may be renewed in the district court after the normal statutory procedures have been pursued.

On the basis of the papers which I have reviewed, I am unable to form a firm opinion one way or the other with respect to the merits of plaintiffs' Freedom of Information Act claim. If it be assumed that there is no merit to that claim, plaintiffs are, of course, not entitled to any relief in this court at this time. For purposes of analysis, therefore, I make the following assumptions (without in fact having so concluded): (a) that in due course plaintiffs will establish their entitlement to the requested document; (b) that said document has in fact been reviewed by Commission personnel to such an extent that plaintiffs' right to a fair and impartial hearing before the Commission has been materially and adversely affected; and (c) that plaintiffs in due course will be able to so demonstrate.

On the foregoing assumptions, I have no doubt that upon review of the Commission determination in Docket No. 8908, assuming that a final Commission order eventually enters against the plaintiffs, that this court would have adequate power to fashion a remedy either setting aside the Commission order or directing such supplementary proceedings either before the Hearing Examiner or before the full Commission as may be necessary and appropriate to avoid injustice to any party.

[1] This order was originally entered as an unpublished order pursuant to Circuit Rule 28. However, at the request of the Federal Trade Commission, and in the absence of any objection by the plaintiffs-appellants, the court, on June 6, 1975, authorized publication pursuant to said rule.

I am not persuaded that going forward with the oral argument will irreparably foreclose the possibility of adequate relief, even making all assumptions of fact and law favorable to the moving party's claim.

Plaintiffs argue that the Commission will not be irreparably injured by a modest delay in the oral argument which is scheduled to be held at 2:00 p.m. E.S.T. on this date. This may well be true. Nevertheless, there is significant public interest in permitting litigation to go forward on an orderly basis and in avoiding delays and interruptions to orderly procedure, which, experience teaches us, inevitably tend to be more prolonged than originally anticipated. Notwithstanding the assumptions which I have made for purposes of decision, I must also presume that the members of the Federal Trade Commission are fully conscious of the allegations made in the Freedom of Information Act complaint and that they are fully mindful of their obligation to accord plaintiffs a full and fair hearing and an adequate opportunity to comment on such relevant matter as may have been considered by the [1015] Commission, or its Hearing Examiner, in the course of its processing of Docket No. 8908.

[2] In sum, I am persuaded that the presumption that the Commission will deal fairly with the litigants before it heavily outweighs the likelihood of irreparable injury which may result from the denial of the pending motion. In view of the fact that the oral argument is scheduled to commence in about two hours, I have concluded that there is inadequate time to assemble a panel of more than one judge to consider the request and therefore am denying same as a single judge.

No. 1066, Docket 74-2343. F.T.C. Docket No. 8872.

(United States Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, June 16, 1975)

1. SIMPLY BECAUSE F.T.C. HAD NOT PROCEEDED AGAINST COMPETITORS OF LINGERIE MANUFACTURER DID NOT MEAN F.T.C. ACTED CAPRICIOUSLY AGAINST PETITIONER IN ISSUING ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST USING ITS MARKETING SCHEME.

   Federal Trade Commission did not act capriciously in proceeding against lingerie manufacturer to cause it to cease and desist in using its particular marketing system because the Commission had not yet proceeded against the manufacturer's competitors who were also using the same marketing scheme where the Commission had not given its blessing to the competitors and an affirmance in manufacturer's case might well trigger agency action against comparable selling plans.

2. UTILIZATION OF COMPARABLE SELLING SCHEME, IN VIOLATION OF F.T.C. ACT, BY VARIOUS MANUFACTURERS DOES NOT OBLIGATE F.T.C. TO FILE SIMULTANEOUS SUITS AGAINST ALL OFFENDERS.

   The Federal Trade Commission is under no obligation to start simultaneous suits against all alleged offenders which utilize comparable selling scheme.

3. FINDING THAT LINGERIE MANUFACTURER'S MULTILEVEL DISTRIBUTORSHIP HAD THE CAPACITY TO DECEIVE PROSPECTIVE DISTRIBUTORS WAS NOT SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

   Evidence did not support finding of Federal Trade Commission that lingerie manufacturer's multilevel distributorship scheme had the capacity and potential for deception of prospective distributors.

4. WHAT CONSTITUTES UNFAIR COMPETITION IS FOR THE COURTS TO EVENTUALLY DETERMINE, NOT F.T.C.

   It is for the courts eventually and not the Federal Trade Commission to determine what unfair competition is.

5. EVIDENCE SUPPORTED F.T.C. FINDING THAT CERTAIN PROMOTIONAL CLAIMS WERE DECEPTIVE.

   Substantial evidence supported finding of Federal Trade Commission that claims in lingerie manufacturer's promotional literature and material for recruiting distributors that ascension up the marketing ladder was rapid, that all distributors had the potential of making large profits and that the supply of available participants was inexhaustible were deceptive.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 518 F.2d 33.)

On petition for review of F.T.C. order to cease and desist, court held the Commission's proceeding against manufacturer without proceeding against manufacturer's competitors was not capricious; evidence did not support finding the manufacturer's merchandising scheme was inherently unfair and deceptive; but evidence did support finding that certain claims in promotional literature and recruiting material were deceptive.

Before MULLIGAN, TIMBERS and GURFEIN, Circuit Judges.

MULLIGAN, Circuit Judge:

This is a petition to review a cease and desist order issued by the Federal Trade [34] Commission against Ger-Ro-Mar, Inc., a California corporation doing business as Symbra'Ette, Inc., and Carl G. Simonsen, individually and as President of the said corporation.

Petitioners operate a family business which was organized in 1963 and is engaged in the manufacture and sale of brassieres, girdles, swimwear and lingerie. Its sales have grown from $36,832.91 in 1965 to $2,054,250.62 in 1969 but dropped to $1,195,465.75 in 1972. The FTC issued a complaint on November 24, 1971 which alleged that the petitioners' marketing system constituted unfair and deceptive acts and practices and unfair methods of competition in violation of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45.[1] The FTC complaint contained five counts. Count I charged that the petitioners' merchandising program was in the nature of a lottery; Count II charged that the program, which depended upon the ability of distributors to recruit others, was an unfair method of competition as well as an unfair and deceptive act and practice in commerce; Count III charged that the representations and promotional materials of the petitioners were false, misleading and deceptive; Count IV charged unlawful vertical price fixing; and Count V claimed unlawful restrictions upon distributor resales.

After an answer and a hearing an administrative law judge rendered an Initial Decision dated October 11, 1973 which upheld the charges of violations contained in all five counts. The Commission on July 23, 1974 issued a Final Order and Opinion which reversed the administrative judge on the lottery count (Count I) and affirmed him on all the other counts. A motion for reconsideration filed by petitioners was denied by the Commission on October 1, 1974. This petition for review followed.

[1] "(a)(1) Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared unlawful.

* * * * * * *

"(6) The Commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations, except banks, common carriers subject to the Acts to regulate commerce, air carriers and foreign air carriers subject to the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, and persons, partnerships, or corporations insofar as they are subject to the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, as amended, except as provided in section 406(b) of said Act, from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce."

I

Since the Count I violation (lottery) was reversed below, that issue is not before us. Although the petitioners seek to have the order set aside in its entirety, no serious argument is made with respect to those parts of the Commission's order which require them to cease and desist from vertical price fixing (except in states having Fair Trade Laws) and from enforcing customer restrictions upon reselling. Petitioners have in any event agreed to discontinue such practices. Hence paragraphs 9, 10 and 11 of the Commission's order to cease and desist, which relate to these violations, are affirmed and enforced.

II

Before reaching the substance of this petition we should dispose of a major contention of the petitioners, namely, that the order be set aside because the Commission has acted arbitrarily and capriciously in taking action against them while taking none against their direct competitors who utilize comparable selling plans. Paragraph 10 of the Stipulation of Facts dated March 16, 1973 states:

> There are competitors of Symbra'ette selling brassieres, girdles, swim-wear and lingerie under similar marketing and sales programs. As of March 16, 1973, the Federal Trade Commission has instituted no formal proceedings against any of these competitors on the issues raised by the present complaint.

[35] [1,2] Petitioners argue that the FTC action against them, while leaving their competitors unscathed, is in direct conflict with the holding of this court in Marco Sales Company v. FTC, 453 F.2d 1 (2d Cir. 1971). We disagree. In Marco, the Commission had proceeded capriciously not because it had taken no action against others charged with utilizing the same selling device (punch boards), but rather because it had previously instituted a rule-making procedure which regulated the use of punch boards in the food retail and gasoline industries; that is, the Commission did not abolish punch board gambling in those industries, it was content merely to regulate. However, it proceeded by adjudicatory procedures against Marco Sales and the order under review prohibited the use of punch boards by Marco without condition. In sum, while others were regulated, Marco was annihilated. This we deemed to constitute an abuse of agency discretion. The situation here is distinguishable. The Commission has not given its blessings to Symbra'Ette competitors while condemning Symbra'Ette. It has not yet proceeded against others and an affirmance of this order might well trigger agency action against comparable selling plans. In Marco, we noted specifically that "[o]bviously, the Commission cannot be expected to bring simultaneous proceedings against all of those engaged in identical practices". 453 F.2d at 6. That proposition is well established. FTC v. Universal-

Rundle Corp., 387 U.S. 244, 251, 87 S.Ct. 1622, 18 L.Ed.2d 749 (1967); Moog Industries, Inc. v. FTC, 355 U.S. 411, 413, 78 S.Ct. 377, 2 L.Ed.2d 370 (1958). We conclude that while petitioners may be unfortunate in being the first target of the Commission with respect to the selling practices in question, the Commission is under no obligation to start simultaneous suits against all alleged offenders and it did not abuse its discretion in any sense under the Marco holding.

The substantial questions before us are whether or not the Symbra'Ette mer[35]chandising scheme is an unfair method of competition and an unfair and deceptive practice, and the related question of whether or not petitioners' promotion of the plan was inherently deceptive. It is necessary at the outset to note that March 16, 1973 Stipulation of Facts (Para. 9) stated:

> There is no contention that any deception, fraud, unethical practice, misrepresentation, or improper conduct is present in the presentation of the products or their prices to customers. Therefore, according to the theory of the FTC complaint, it is not the purchaser, actual or prospective, of Symbra'Ette garments who is being gulled or put upon but rather the prospective distributor and his recruits. Since the Symbra'Ette merchandising scheme is elaborate, we must set it forth, unfortunately in some detail, to understand the Commission's misgivings.

The Marketing Plan

Petitioners, through their multi-level marketing program, seek to enlist the services of men and women throughout the country to sell their products at wholesale and retail, requiring distributors to buy an inventory of varying size before they may participate in the program. A potential distributor (also called a "consultant") may enter at one of three levels ("Key Distributor," "Senior Key," or "Supervisor"), and eventually work up to a fourth and fifth level (District Manager and Regional Manager). Entry into the program is effected by means of a non-refundable purchase of merchandise from the company or one of its distributors. All distributors except the lowest (Key) purchase directly from the company; a Key Distributor purchases from his sponsor. Initial purchase requirements for entry into the program are stated in terms of "Retail Purchase Volume" (RPV), i.e., the volume of merchandise expressed in terms of its suggested retail price. The initial purchase requirement for entry into the program is $300 in RPV for a Key, which at the allowed discount of 35% [36] amounts to an initial purchase requirement of around $215.

The initial RPV required for a Senior Key is $1,000, which, at the allowed discount of 40%, and including literature and sales aids, entails an initial purchase of around $700. The initial purchase required of a Supervisor is around $1,950, resulting from a $3,000 RPV requirement at a 45% discount, plus sales aids.

A Key Distributor may engage in unlimited recruiting of other distributors, and advance to the level of Senior Key if his retail purchase volume and that of his recruits amount to $1,000 in one calendar month. Similarly, Senior Keys and Supervisors may rise to higher levels by achieving the requisite Retail Purchase Volume, through a combination of their own retail sales and those of their "personal group" (their recruits and recruits' recruits).

A Key Distributor's profit is the difference between the prices paid the Key's sponsor for products, and the prices at which the Key resells. The profit for consultants at higher levels in the program consists of the margin on the consultant's own retail sales, a percentage profit on purchases made by his recruits, and various commissions, overrides, and other compensation related to the purchase volume of directly and indirectly sponsored consultants.

To induce individuals to become consultants, petitioners distributed various promotional materials which recited the details of the marketing system, and illustrated, how, both by building a large personal group of salespeople via recruitment, and by selling at retail, an individual could earn large sums of money, ranging in the illustrations up to $56,400 per year for District Managers and $90,600 yearly for Regional Managers. Of the Regional Manager position, petitioners' promotional "flip chart" promised "ANYONE CAN ACHIEVE THIS LEVEL." According to the Commission, individuals were induced by these promotional materials, and the prospect of earning large amounts of money via retailing and recruiting activities, to purchase the requisite volume of Symbra'Ette products for the level at which they wished to enter.

IV

The marketing plan thus described is characterized by the Commission as inherently unfair and deceptive because it had "the substantial tendency, capacity, and potential to mislead." It supposedly caused participants to invest their money in the hope of realizing income which was impossible for all to achieve: the laws of geometrical progression would make it impossible to recruit continually since inevitably a point of saturation would be reached which would defeat the plan and thwart the ambitions of those who had been promised profits.

[3] It is unquestioned that under its own rules (Rule 3.43(a), Rules of Practice of the Federal Trade Commission, 16 C.F.R. § 3.43(a) (1974)) and pertinent cases (e. g., Montgomery Ward & Co. v. FTC, 379 F.2d 666, 670 (7th Cir. 1967); Carter Products, Inc. v. FTC, 268 F.2d 461, 487 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 361 U.S. 884, 80 S.Ct. 155, 4 L.Ed.2d 120 (1959)), the Commission has the burden of establishing a section 5 violation. Petitioners urge that there is no showing of any actual deception or actual injury. The only witness produced by the Commission did not testify that he was misled or deceived and in fact testified that he and his wife had profited by the distributorship.[2] However, it is settled that the Commission need not show actual deception or actual damage; rather, a business method having only the capacity to deceive can violate section 5. E. g., FTC v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U.S. 67, 81, 54 S.Ct. 315, 78 L.Ed. 655 (1934); [37] Charles of the Ritz Distributors Corp. v. FTC, 143 F.2d 676, 680 (2d Cir. 1944). The theory upon which the Commission proceeds, then, is that the plan had the capacity and potential for deception. The question before us becomes whether or not the finding of potential deception is supported by substantial evidence in the record. See Universal Camera Corp. v. N.L.R.B., 340 U.S. 474, 487-88, 71 S.Ct. 456, 95 L.Ed. 456 (1951); cf. FTC v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 385, 85 S.Ct. 1035, 13 L.Ed.2d 306 (1965).

The sole evidence to support the Commission's holding that the plan is inherently unfair and deceptive is a mathematical formula,[3] which shows that if each participant in the plan recruited only five new recruits each month and each of those in turn recruited five additional recruits in the following month, and this process were allowed to continue, at the end of only 12 months the number of participants would exceed 244 million, including presumably the entire staff of the FTC. The Commission concludes that this, in effect, is the impossible dream and that the siren song of Symbra'Ette must be stilled. We find no flaw in the mathematics or the extrapolation and agree that the prospect of a quarter of a billion brassiere and girdle hawkers is not only impossible but frightening to contemplate, particularly since it is in excess of the present population of the Nation, only about half of whom hopefully are prospective lingerie consumers. However, we live in a real world and not fantasyland.

As indicated by the record, the fact is that Symbra'Ette, which commenced business in 1963, did not reach its peak in distributorships until 1972 when it had attracted some 3,635 distributors. The record does not indicate the geographical distribution of these vendors, and we have no study or analysis in the record which would realistically establish that some recruiting saturation exists which would make the entry of additional distributors and the recruitment of others potentially impossible in any practical sense. While the Commission need not establish actual deception by the testimony of disappointed entrepreneurs, it has failed entirely to establish a potential threat. Not all Americans aspire to the calling in issue and not all who are attracted will continue indefinitely.[4]

[2] The Commission's witness testified that, during the first year of their Symbra'Ette business, his wife's profit on the sale of merchandise to ultimate consumers was approximately $1,500; he did so well he reordered petitioners' merchandise over 50 times, although much of their merchandise was sold to recruits.

[3] [37] For the mathematically curious, the formula for calculating the number of participants at any level "n" is $n=x^{i}$, where "x" is the number of recruits per participant per level, and "i" is the level. Because of the exponential function, the number of recruits would, in theory at least, expand quite rapidly. For example, to use the Commission's hypothetical figures of 5 for x (the number of recruits per participant per level) and 12 for i (the number of levels), the formula becomes $n=5^{12}$, or 244,140,625.

[4] The cases relied upon by the Commission to establish that potential injury is sufficient to constitute a section 5 violation involve false advertising claims where the Commission has established by evidence that the claims made in the material are false and hence the courts have not required proof of actual deception.[5] Even then the courts have [38] often not talked about a theoretical possibility but rather, as Judge Kaufman noted in FTC v. Sterling Drug, Inc., 317 F.2d 669, 674 (2d Cir. 1963), the situation where "the representations made have a capacity or tendency to deceive, i. e., when there is a likelihood or fair probability that the reader will be misled" (emphasis added). Here there is no showing at all that even the most credulous prospective distributor was likely or probably gulled by the plan discussed. The validity of the rule of mathematical progression must, in our view, not be considered in vacuo but must be put in the context of actual competitive conditions, see Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FTC, 414 F.2d 974, 978 (7th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 907, 90 S.Ct. 903, 25 L.Ed.2d 88 (1970); Korber Hats, Inc. v. FTC, 311 F.2d 358, 360-61 (1st Cir. 1962); Ford Motor Co. v. FTC, 120 F.2d 175, 181 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 314 U.S. 668, 62 S.Ct. 130, 86 L.Ed. 535 (1941), where whatever expertise the Commission may have in determining possible adverse competitive injury or consumer deception will weigh heavily with us. However, here it has relied solely upon an abstract mathematical theorem without any attempt to relate the theory to the marketplace. The Commission has made no study, offered no analysis and has no greater familiarity with the law of geometric progression

[4] For example, a Dr. Dirk Wassenaar, a witness for petitioners, testified on cross-examination that "in practice . . . distributors go into this for a while and they get tired of it or they find greener pastures or they get pregnant or they get married or they get transferred and they give up this particular kind of program. So you have to consider a drop-out rate. . . . So as the company grows, the number of people that will join the company will become smaller, the number of people dropping will probably increase and this thing will balance out to some kind of an equilibrium."

[5] For example, in FTC v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U.S. 67, 54 S.Ct. 315, 78 L.Ed. 655 (1934), "Western Yellow Pine" was sold under the trade name of "California White Pine," though it was in fact inferior to true white pine lumber; furthermore, the Court found that the misleading trade name caused confusion among consumers. In Montgomery Ward & Co. v. FTC, 379 F.2d 666 (7th Cir. 1967), the Commission attacked advertising which represented that merchandise was guaranteed without specifying the nature and extent of the guarantees; in fact, there was a deviation between the advertised and actual guarantees since the latter were subject to limitations and conditions not revealed in the advertisements. [38] This circuit, in denying a temporary injunction in FTC v. Sterling Drug, Inc., 317 F.2d 669 (2d Cir. 1963), ruled that the Commission failed to show it had reason to believe that the public would be misled by advertising concerning the results of a medical study on pain relievers. In Charles of the Ritz Distrib. Corp. v. FTC, 143 F.2d 676 (2d Cir. 1944), the Commission found that the petitioner's "Rejuvenescence Cream" and its accompanying advertising falsely represented that the product would rejuvenate and restore the appearance of youth to the skin, whereas in fact such was a medical impossibility. Finally, in Ford Motor Co. v. FTC, 120 F.2d 175 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 314 U.S. 668, 62 S.Ct. 130, 86 L.Ed. 535 (1941), petitioner's advertisement of a "6%" plan to finance sales of its cars was found to be misleading on its face because no description was given of the actual financing practice, which did not calculate interest on a declining balance and hence really produced a simple annual interest rate of 11 1/2%.

than the court. It is for the courts eventually and not the Commission to determine what unfair competition is. FTC v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 453, 42 S.Ct. 150, 66 L.Ed. 307 (1922).

The per se condemnation of the recruiting scheme disclosed here is not supported by substantial evidence or even a scintilla. Cf. Callaghan & Co. v. FTC, 163 F.2d 359, 372 (2d Cir. 1947). Hence, we vacate and set aside paragraphs 1 and 2 of the trial order of the Commission.[6]

V.

[5] It does not follow of course that the failure of the Commission to establish that the plan in question is violative of section 5 means that the petitioners are free to advertise it in their promotional literature in deceptive terms. Here, the Commission did rely upon sales manuals and other specific representations made by the petitioners that ascension up the marketing ladder was rapid, [39] that all had the potential of making large profits and that the supply of available participants was inexhaustible. There is sufficient evidence in the record to support the finding that these claims were deceptive. In FTC v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., supra, 380 U.S. at 385, 85 S.Ct. 1035, we are told that the Commission's judgment with respect to allegedly deceptive advertising is to be given great weight. We further note that the petitioners, in their reply brief, have conceded that "[I]f there be any questionable conduct on the part of Symbra'Ette, it must be in the alleged misrepresentations in its advertising. The ends of justice will be met and any misconduct will be obviated by merely prohibiting misrepresentations in the advertising." We are inclined to agree and affirm and enforce paragraphs 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 of the final order.[7]

Offering, operating, or participating in, directly or indirectly, any marketing or sales plan or program wherein a participant gives a valuable consideration in return for the opportunity to receive compensation for inducing other persons to become participants in the plan or program; provided that "compensation" as used in this paragraph only does not mean any payment based on actually consummated sales of goods or services to persons who are not participants in the plan or program, and who do not purchase goods or services in order to participate in the plan or program.

"2. Offering, operating, or participating in, directly or indirectly, any marketing or sales plan or program wherein the financial gains to participants are, or are represented to be, based in any manner or to any degree upon their recruiting of other participants who obtain the right under the plan or program to recruit yet other participants, whose function during their first year in the plan or program includes, in any respect whatsoever, the recruitment of participants."

1. "POLICY DETERMINATION" UNDER F.O.I.A. JURISDICTION IS SUBJECT TO DISCLOSURE AS A FINAL AGENCY ACTION USED AS TOUCHSTONE FOR FUTURE ACTIONS.

   "Policy determination" subject to public disclosure under Freedom of Information Act is final agency decision which is utilized as touchstone for future administrative action.

2. F.O.I.A. EXEMPTION COVERING INTER- AND INTRA-AGENCY MEMOS AND LETTERS DOES NOT APPLY TO FINAL OPINIONS BUT DOES COVER MEMOS AND RECORDS OF ORAL DISCUSSIONS LEADING TO FINAL OPINION.

   Exemption under Freedom of Information Act for inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency can never apply to "final opinions," whereas memoranda and records or oral discussions leading up to final opinion or binding decision are protected from disclosure by such exemption.

In response to petition for rehearing of decision of April 16, 1975, p. 1321 herein, court held, inter alia, that a "policy determination" subject to disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act was a final agency action.

"5. Misrepresenting in any manner, directly or by implication, or placing in the hands of others the means or instrumentalities for misrepresenting, the financial gains reasonably achievable by participants in any marketing or sales plan or program, of the commercial feasibility thereof.

"6. Failing to maintain adequate records (a) which disclose the facts upon which any claims of the type discussed in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this Order are based; and (b) from which the validity of any claim of the type discussed in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this Order can be determined.

"7. Requiring that an individual pay a valuable consideration in return for the right to participate in any marketing or sales program, without first disclosing to such prospective participant in writing the number of other participants in the marketing area in which such prospect plans to operate."

We note that paragraph 3 does not involve misrepresentation but rather imposes a repurchase obligation upon the petitioners. Since they indicated on the argument of this appeal that they have instituted this practice, there is no existing dispute about the matter.

ORDER

[935] On consideration of appellees' petition for rehearing, it is Ordered by the Court that appellees aforesaid petition is denied.

PER CURIAM:

[1] Appellees have filed a petition for rehearing of our 16 April 1975 decision in this case. They take primary issue with our ruling that those portions of the Commission's chronological minutes which it described to the District Court as containing "policy determinations" must be disclosed to the appellant. We deny appellees' petition. To our mind, a "policy determination" denotes a final agency decision which is utilized as a touchstone for future administrative action. Such decisions must be made available to the public, as this court held in Sterling Drug, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, "to prevent the development of secret law within the Commission."[1]

[2] We take this opportunity to emphasize, however, that our opinion leaves open the possibility on remand that the District Court may find, with the benefit of a more adequate record, that the Commission's own characterization of the chronological minutes as containing "policy determinations" was inaccurate. Nothing in our opinion requires that the policy discussions or recommendations of FTC Commissioners be revealed to the public.[2] If the agency, in spite of its own description of portions of the chronological minutes as "policy determinations," can satisfy the District Court—through the procedure outlined in our opinion—that no final agency opinions or binding decisions are found therein, the disclosure rationale of Sterling Drug will not be applicable to this case. For, as the Supreme Court so recently held in NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co.,[3] Exemption 5 can never apply to "final opinions," whereas memoranda (and records of oral discussions) leading up to a final opinion or binding decision are protected from disclosure by Exemption 5.

Civ. A. No. C-74-1927 RHS. F.T.C. Docket No. 8988.

(United States District Court, Northern District of California, June 25, 1975)

On motion for summary judgment, court held that plaintiffs are entitled to a permanent injunction prohibiting the Commission from proceeding further against them in Docket 8988; and plaintiffs are entitled to a declaratory judgment that the F.T.C. has no jurisdiction to proceed against them under the F.T.C. Act with respect to matters contained in the Commission's complaint.

Before SCHNACKE, District Judge.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. This action is brought by the State of California on behalf of its Director of Food and Agriculture (a civil executive officer of the State); the California Milk Producers Advisory Board (established pursuant to the California Marketing Act of 1937 [Cal. Food & Ag. Code §§58601-59293] to assist the Director of Food and Agriculture in the administration of a marketing order, issued on October 8, 1969, for research, education, and promotion of market milk and dairy products in California); and Cunningham and Walsh, Inc. (an advertising agency which in all matters here involved, has acted as the agent of the State). The defendant Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter, FTC) is an independent agency of the United States Government, and the individual defendants in this action are the current members of the FTC and an administrative law judge thereof, who are sued solely in their official capacities.

2. On August 1, 1974, an administrative complaint was issued by the FTC, Docket No. 8988, naming as respondents the California Milk Producers Advisory Board and Cunningham and Walsh, Inc. In the FTC complaint certain advertisements promoting the sale of milk were alleged by the FTC to be false and misleading in violation of Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (hereinafter, FTC Act). Plaintiffs here seek a permanent injunction and a declaratory judgment against the FTC's proceeding with its administrative complaint in Docket No. 8988, on the grounds that Congress has not granted the FTC jurisdiction over states, state agencies, state instrumentalities, or state officers acting in their official capacities.

3. On September 11, 1974, this Court granted a temporary restraining order enjoining the FTC from proceeding for a period of 10 days. A preliminary injunction was granted on September 23, 1974. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed on October 29, 1974.

4. Defendants have filed a motion to dismiss herein and, in the alternative, a motion for summary judgment. Plaintiffs have filed a cross-motion for summary judgment. Both plaintiffs and defendants have filed lengthy affidavits and exhibits in connection with these motions which supplement the affidavits and exhibits filed in connection with the hearing on the preliminary injunction granted herein. Based on the affidavits and exhibits filed herein and the provisions of the California Marketing Act of 1937 [Cal. Food & Ag. Code §§58601-59293], the Court finds the facts set forth below are established and undisputed in this record.

5. The California Milk Producers Advisory Board is an instrumentality of the State of California established to assist and advise the Director of Food and Agriculture in fulfilling his statutory duties under the California Marketing Act of 1937. The Director of Food and Agriculture and the State of California are the real parties in interest herein. The advertising being challenged by the FTC in Docket No. 8988 is part of the marketing order of October 8, 1969, effectuated by the Director of Food and Agriculture, pursuant to the California Marketing Act of 1937, which specifically authorizes such advertising.

6. No facts have been adduced in this record to contradict the affidavit of Gordon B. Reuhl, dated March 13, 1975, which provides:

> (5) With respect to the promotional activities of the Advisory Board, all budgets, programs, and specific advertising copy are recommended by the Board, to the Director of Food and Agriculture for his specific approval prior to their implementation. From time to time the Director has specifically disapproved certain promotional materials recommended by the Board. In such cases, the proposed program or materials have not been used. In addition to requiring the approval of the Director of Food and Agriculture on all programs and materials, the Board has, since 1972, submitted all nutritional material to Dr. George Briggs of the University of California for his approval prior to the use of such material.
> (6) In my capacity as Manager of the Board, I am required to submit all recommendations by the Board to the Director of Food and Agriculture of the State for his approval, and this procedure has been followed.

7. Cunningham and Walsh, Inc., at all times relevant herein, to the extent that it has participated in the creation, preparation, or dissemination of the advertising materials challenged by the FTC, has acted as the agent of the State.

8. The Court finds that there are no material issues of fact between the parties herein and that the aggregate effect of the delay, expense, and uncertainty which would result from resort to the administrative process herein would result in irreparable injury to plaintiffs herein, for which they would have no adequate remedy at law. The importance of the question presented relating to state-federal relations indicates that prompt judicial resolution of this jurisdictional dispute by the courts at this time is required.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The jurisdiction of the FTC under the FTC Act extends to "persons, partnerships, or corporations" [15 U.S.C. §45(a)(6)]. The definition of corporation includes an "association, incorporated or unincorporated . . . which is organized to carry on business for its own profit or that of its members" [15 U.S.C. §44]. Neither the FTC Act nor its legislative history indicates that states, state agencies, state instrumentalities, or state officers in their official capacities were intended by Congress to be included within the terms "persons, partnerships, or corporations."

2. The FTC Act was designed to supplement and bolster the Sherman Act, to stop in their incipiency acts and practices which, when full blown, would violate the Sherman Act [FTC v. Motion Picture Adv. Co., 344 U.S. 392, 394-395 (1953)]. In view of the close relationship between the two Acts, the fact that action by states, state agencies, state instrumentalities, and state officers in their official capacities is not subject to the Sherman Act [Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943); New Mexico v. American Petrofina, Inc., 501 F.2d 363 (9th Cir. 1974)] indicates that it is not subject to the FTC Act either.

3. The FTC may not proceed against a private corporation—here, Cunningham and Walsh, Inc.-merely aiding the State in carrying out the conduct in question [E.W. Wiggins Airways, Inc. v. Massachusetts Port Auth., 362 F.2d 52, 56 (1st Cir. 1966)].

4. Ordinarily, courts won't interfere with an administrative agency until it has completed its action, and administrative remedies may not be bypassed [Borden, Inc. v. FTC, 495 F.2d 785, 786-787 (7th Cir. 1974)]. However, the FTC here clearly lacks jurisdiction under the FTC Act over the State and the other plaintiffs, and there is no specialized administrative understanding required to determine that this is so, such as would be required to decide, for example, the factual question of whether a private entity was engaged in interstate commerce; this case involves only a question of statutory construction. For the foregoing reasons, requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies is inappropriate [see Lone Star Cement Corporation v. FTC, 339 F.2d 505, 510 (9th Cir. 1964); Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184, 188-189 (1958)].

5. There are no material disputed issues of fact. Defendants' motions to dismiss and for summary judgment herein are denied.

Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment is hereby granted. Plaintiffs are entitled to a permanent injunction prohibiting defendants, their agents and employees, from proceeding further against plaintiffs in Docket No. 8988, presently pending before the FTC. Plaintiffs are further entitled to a declaratory judgment that the FTC has no jurisdiction to proceed against them under the FTC Act with respect to the matters complained of by the FTC in Docket No. 8988. Judgment shall be entered accordingly. Costs shall not be assessed against defendants herein.

Nos. 73-1574, 73-2138, 73-2239, 74-1172 to 74-1174, 74-1199. F.T.C. Docket No. 8860.

(United States Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit, June 30, 1975)

1. JUDICIAL REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION IS THE RULE IN ABSENCE OF STATUTORY PROHIBITION OF JUDICIAL REVIEW, UNDER THE ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT.

   Under Administrative Procedure Act, judicial review of administrative action is the rule unless there is statutory prohibition of judicial review or unless agency action is committed to agency discretion by law.

2. ONLY PARTIES SUBJECT TO F.T.C. CEASE AND DESIST ORDER ARE ENTITLED TO JUDICIAL REVIEW OF SUCH ORDER.

   Because only parties subject to Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order are entitled to judicial review of such order, consumers organization was not entitled to review of action of FTC in refusing to order corrective advertising after it found that baking company and its advertising agency had falsely and deceptively advertised nutritive properties of baking company's bread.

3. LEGISLATIVE HISTORY MAY BE USED TO SHOW LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

   While statutory prohibition of judicial review will be found only upon showing of clear and convincing evidence of legislative intent to prohibit review, prohibition need not be express and legislative intent to prohibit review may be shown by legislative history.

[368] Opinion for the Court filed by Senior District Judge SOLOMON.

SOLOMON, Senior District Judge:

The Consumer Federation of America (Consumers),[1] ITT Continental Baking Company, Inc. (ITT Continental), and Ted Bates & Company, Inc. (Bates) petition this Court to review a Federal Trade Commission (FTC or Commission) order. For reasons set forth below, we dismiss for lack of jurisdiction the petitions of Consumers and we transfer the petitions of ITT Continental and Bates to the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

In August, 1971, the FTC issued a complaint against ITT Continental and its advertising agency, Bates. The complaint alleged that ITT Continental and Bates violated Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTCA), 15 U.S.C. §§ 45, 52, by falsely and deceptively advertising Wonder Bread and Hostess Snack Cakes, two of ITT Continental's products. The complaint proposed "corrective advertising" as a remedy for the deceptive advertising.

In June, 1972, the Administrative Law Judge began extensive hearings on the complaint. On December 18, 1972, he issued an initial decision recommending that the complaint be dismissed. The FTC complaints counsel appealed to the full Commission.

On January 5, 1973, Consumers moved to intervene as a party to support the complaint before the full Commission.[2] The Commission denied the motion,[3] but allowed Consumers to file a brief and present oral argument as amici curiae. Consumers urged the Commission to re[369]verse the initial decision and to order extensive corrective advertising.

On October 19, 1973, the FTC, in its final order on the merits, dismissed most of the complaint. Nevertheless, it sustained an allegation that ITT Continental and Bates had misrepresented Wonder Bread as "an extraordinary food for producing dramatic growth in children". The FTC issued a broad cease and desist order but did not order corrective advertising.

On November 5, 1973, Consumers petitioned this Court to review the FTC's refusal to order corrective advertising.[4] Shortly thereafter, ITT Continental and Bates petitioned the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to review the FTC's cease and desist order. On December 11, 1973, the Second Circuit, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2112(a), transferred those cases to this Court.[5]

During November, 1973, ITT Continental and Bates filed motions to reconsider with the FTC. On December 14, 1973, the Commission issued an order which revised its October 19th order. Consumers petitioned this Court for review of the December 14th order.[6] ITT Continental and Bates again filed for review in the Second Circuit; that Court again transferred the cases here.[7] The petitions of ITT Continental, Bates, and Consumers were consolidated here.

ITT Continental and Bates were granted leave to intervene in the petitions for review filed by Consumers. On January 21, 1974, the intervenors filed a motion to dismiss Consumers' petitions; they also filed a motion to transfer their petitions back to the Second Circuit.

We grant both motions.

This Court does not have jurisdiction to hear Consumers' petitions. Section 5(c) of the FTCA, 15 U.S.C. § 45(c), provides that:

[2] Consumers were aware of the proceedings before the Administrative Law Judge, but they did not seek to participate in them.

> Any person, partnership, or corporation required by an order of the [Federal Trade] Commission to cease and desist from using any method of competition or act or practice may obtain a review of such order in the court of appeals of the United States . . . .

Consumers concede that Section 5(c) does not grant this Court jurisdiction to hear their petition. They contend, however, that we have jurisdiction under Section 10(b) of the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), 5 U.S.C. § 702:

> A person suffering legal wrong because of agency action, or adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action within the meaning of a relevant statute, is entitled to judicial review thereof.

[1,2] Under the APA, judicial review of administrative action is the rule, Barlow v. Collins, 397 U.S. 159, 166, 90 S.Ct. 832, 25 L.Ed.2d 192 (1970), unless there is a statutory prohibition of judicial review or unless agency action is committed to agency discretion by law. Section 10(a), 5 U.S.C. § 701. ITT Continental and Bates contend that Section 5(c) of the FTCA only allows judicial review for parties subject to an FTC cease and desist order and therefore Consumers are not entitled to review under the APA. We agree.

Consumers rely on language in Pepsico, Inc. v. FTC, 472 F.2d 179, 185-86 (2d Cir. 1972), which suggests that a non-party to FTC proceedings may be entitled to seek review of an FTC order in a district court. This, Consumers contend, supports their argument that Section 5 does not limit judicial review to parties subject to FTC orders. We disagree.

The issue before the Pepsico Court was whether the FTC's denial of motions to dismiss a complaint for failure to join indispensible parties was "final agency action" subject to judicial review under Section 10(c) of the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 704. In its analysis, the Court referred to a cease and desist order as a clear example [370] of final FTC action. The Court noted that in that hypothetical situation, not before the Court, a party subject to a cease and desist order could seek review in a court of appeals; the Court went on to suggest that even a non-party who was "adversely affected or aggrieved" by the agency action, 5 U.S.C. § 702, could seek review in a district court.

The Pepsico Court was not required to nor did it decide whether Section 5(c) of the FTCA precludes judicial review for a person not subject to an FTC cease and desist order. The issue was whether the FTC's denial of motions to dismiss was final agency action, not whether persons not named in a cease and desist order were entitled to review.

[3] A statutory prohibition of judicial review will be found only upon a showing of "clear and convincing evidence" of legislative intent to prohibit review. Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 141, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 18 L.Ed.2d 681 (1967). Nevertheless, the prohibition need not be express. Legislative intent to prohibit review may be shown by legislative history. Air Line Dispatchers Association v. National

Mediation Board, 89 U.S.App.D.C. 24, 189 F.2d 685, 688 (1951); see also National Welfare Rights Organization (NWRO) v. Finch, 139 U.S. App.D.C. 46, 429 F.2d 725, 736 (1970).[8]

We believe that the legislative history of Section 5(c) presents clear and convincing evidence of a legislative intent to allow review of FTC cease and desist orders only on the petition of parties subject to the orders.

Section 5, as originally drafted, precluded anyone other than the Commission itself from seeking judicial review of an FTC order.[9] Several Senators proposed amendments which included provisions to expand the class of persons entitled to review.

The principal amendments on judicial review were proposed by Senators Cummins and Pomerene. The main difference between their proposals was the broad review under the Pomerene amendment and the narrow review under the Cummins amendment.[10] The amendments differed on who were entitled to initiate review proceedings and the scope of such review.

The narrow amendment, proposed by Senator Cummins, authorized the FTC to bring an enforcement action; it also allowed judicial review of an FTC order for any "person, partnership, or corporation named in the complaint."[11] Com[371]plainants were not entitled to review.[12] Senator Cummins thought that this restriction was proper because he believed that the FTC would protect both the rights of persons injured by unfair competition and the rights of society in general.[13]

[8] We recognize that a statutory grant of review to one class of persons does not necessarily signify a legislative intent to deny review to all others. NWRO v. Finch, supra at 735-36; Peoples v. United States Department of Agriculture, 138 U.S.App.D.C. 291, 427 F.2d 561, 565 (1970). Here, unlike in those cases, the legislative history is not silent on the right of review by parties not mentioned in the statute.

[9] The House bill, H.R. 15613, did not provide for judicial review except for enforcement actions by the Commission. 51 Cong.Rec. 14922 (September 10, 1914); see also id. at 14931 (remarks of Representative Covington). The House passed that bill on June 5 and sent it to the Senate.

Rather than consider amendments to the House bill, the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce reported to the Senate an entirely new bill. Id. at 14921. As initially reported to the Senate floor by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the bill provided only for enforcement by the FTC: "Whenever the commission, after the issuance of such order, shall find that such corporation has not complied therewith, the commission may petition the district court . . . praying the court to issue an injunction to enforce such order of the commission; and the court is hereby authorized to issue such injunction." H.R. 15613, 63d Cong., 2d Sess. (1914); 51 Cong.Rec. 11181 (June 26, 1914). See 51 Cong.Rec. 13066 (July 31, 1914) (remarks of Senator Newlands).

[10] See, e. g., 51 Cong.Rec. 13045 (July 31, 1914) (remarks of Senator Cummins); id. at 13052 (remarks of Senator Walsh); id. at 13066 (remarks of Senator Newlands); id. at 13107 (remarks of Senator White) (August 1, 1914).

[11] "If upon such hearing the commission shall find that the person, partnership, or corporation named in the complaint is practicing such unfair competition, it shall thereupon enter its findings of record and issue and serve upon the offender an order requiring . . . that the offender shall cease and desist from such unfair competition . . . Any suit brought by any such person, partnership, or corporation to annul, suspend, or set aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the commission shall be brought against the commission in a district court of the United States . . . ." Id. at 12873 (July 28, 1914); id. at 13045 (July 31, 1914).

[12] On the day before the Senate adopted the Cummins amendment, the question of whether an FTC complainant could seek review was discussed:

> "MR. CLAPP. What instrument, then, is there . . . so certain to lead to the enforcement of the law as the right of the individual upon whom the unjust practice has fallen to have a review of the decision, the action, the order of the commission?
> "I believe . . . the party who complains of an unfair practice should have the same opportunity for a review in the courts as the party against whom the unfair practice is alleged."
> "MR. CUMMINS. . . . [W]hat he suggests destroys entirely the value of the order of the commission. . . .". . . It seems to be founded upon good reason, and yet, however advantageous it might be to allow an appeal of that kind in a particular case, you must put over against it the disadvantage of permitting a court to

The broader amendment, proposed by Senator Pomerene, extended review to FTC complainants and to the Attorney [372] General of the United States.[14] Before the Senate voted on Section 5, the Committee on Interstate Commerce withdrew its original Section 5[15] and inserted the Pomerene amendment.[16]

On August 1, 1914, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, rejected the Pomerene amendment and adopted the Cummins amendment.[17]

Several days later, Senator Pomerene again proposed an amendment review or retry every case brought and determined by the commission . . . ." Id. at 13050 (July 31, 1914).

Later that day, Senator Walsh referred to the differences between the Pomerene and Cummins amendments. He said:

> ". . . [U]nder the amendment offered by [Senator Cummins], if one complains before the commission of unfair practices pursued against him by which his business is being ruined, by which he is being wrongfully driven out of the market, and the commission decides against him, determining that the practice complained of is not unlawful, that it is not unfair competition, and dismisses his complaint, that ends the matter as to him. He can never be heard in a court at all upon his complaint. On the other hand, if the decision goes against the corporation and it is adjudged to be guilty of unfair practices in violation of the law it may have a review in the court . . . .
> ". . . I feel that we ought carefully to guard the rights of the party making the complaint lest at some time or other we should have a commission that has no interest in the maintenance of the law; a commission not desirous of enforcing it against the great combinations, not desirous of enforcing it against those who may sustain friendly relations with members of the commission or those influential with it." Id. at 13053-54.

[13] On August 1, 1914, less than an hour before the Senate voted to adopt the Cummins amendment, the right to review by complainants was again discussed:

> "MR. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask [Senator Cummins] if his amendment provides for any form of appeal by one making complaint to the trade commission, in the event that the trade commission does not grant the remedy to which the complainant believes he is entitled?
> "MR. CUMMINS. It does not. As I said yesterday, that involves opening up everything for a trial de novo. It is impossible to avoid that, if one who is denied relief is given the right to appeal; but I may say that this is not an adversary proceeding. The complaint is initiated by the commission and not by a third person.
> "MR. PITTMAN. Is there any provision for a complaint being made by a third person?
> "MR. CUMMINS. Oh, certainly; anyone has a right to file a complaint with the commission, and if the commission has reason to believe that this section of the law is being violated, it then serves notice of the complaint upon the person or corporation violating it and calls him or it before the commission.
> "MR. PITTMAN. What would be the remedy of the complainant—that is, the individual or corporation suffering from oppressive acts complained of—if it should transpire that the trade commission had tendencies in favor of the oppressive corporation?
> "MR. CUMMINS. Such a person would sue the offending corporation or association to recover damages.
> "MR. PITTMAN. But he would have no remedy through the proposed commission?
> "MR. CUMMINS. I think not; I hope not. This is a proceeding, as I said yesterday, for the benefit of the people of the country. It is intended to prevent unfair competition. Its enforcement is precisely like that of a criminal statute; society enforces the statute; society, through the commission or through the Government, enforces the law, leaving each individual to the recovery of his damages according to the law, but not through the commission, which is the representative of the Government. That is the theory . . . of this proposed law." 51 Cong.Rec. 13102 (August 1, 1914).

[14] "Any party to any proceedings brought under the provisions of this section, including the person upon whose complaint such proceedings shall have been begun, if begun on such complaint, as well as the United States, by and through the Attorney General thereof, may obtain a review of any final order made by such commission . . . ." Id. at 12993 (July 30, 1914).

to Section 5 which contained a provision allowing review for persons other than those subject to an FTC order.[18] The debate on the amendment focused on whether a complainant had a right to review.[19] The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, again defeated the amendment.[20] The Senate did adopt another amendment proposed by Senator Pomerene to permit a complainant to participate in judicial proceedings brought by a person subject to the FTC order.[21] The Senate passed the bill[22] and sent it to the House-Senate Conference Committee.

Section 5 of the bill reported out of the Conference Committee[23] differed significantly from the Senate bill. The Conference Committee version was the one enacted into law. September 26, 1914, ch. 311, 38 Stat. 719. It provided that both enforcement proceedings brought by the FTC and petitions for review by those subject to cease and desist orders could be heard in courts of appeals, rather than in district courts.[24] [373] Senator Pomerene's provision allowing limited participation in judicial proceedings by a complainant was deleted.

In our view the Conference Committee changes negative any intent by the conferees to broaden the category of persons who could seek judicial review. Apparently Senator Cummins was of the same opinion. In reporting the Conference bill to the Senate, Senator Cummins, who was on the Conference Committee, discussed both the substantive and language changes in the review provisions.[25] Because of his strong opposition to the Pomerene amendment, it is significant that Senator Cummins did not object to any change in the provisions for review.

[19] In introducing the amendment, Senator Pomerene said:

> "My purpose in offering this amendment again is to call attention briefly to the very great difference between the provisions of the amendment offered by [Senator Cummins] and the provisions of that offered by myself in this respect. Under the amendments of [Senator Cummins] there is no provision whereby the complainant before the commission can have any hearing whatsoever if the decision of the commission is against him.

To my mind it is un-American to say of two persons to a controversy that one may have a right of review and the other may not . . . ." Id. at 13315.

Senator Saulsbury thought that allowing a right of review by a complainant would protect against the possibility that the FTC might rule in favor of defendants in order to avoid judicial reversal. Id. at 13315. Senators Walsh and Myers also argued vigorously for a right of review for complainants. Id. at 13316-17.

[24] "If such person, partnership, or corporation fails or neglects to obey such order of the commission while the same is in effect, the commission may apply to the circuit court of appeals of the United States . . . for the enforcement of its order . . . ."

"Any party required by such order of the commission to cease and desist from using such [unfair] method of competition may obtain a review of such order in said circuit court of appeals . . . ." Id. at 14766.

This legislative history is clear and convincing evidence that Congress intended to allow judicial review of FTC cease and desist orders only for parties subject to the orders. Competitors who had suffered direct and tangible injury from unfair competition were twice denied the right to seek review. The legislative history of Section 5 shows that Congress did not intend to permit persons and organizations like Consumers, who suffer only remote and intangible injury, to obtain judicial review of FTC orders.

None of the amendments to the FTCA removed any of the limitations on who could seek review. The Wheeler-Lea Amendments, March 21, 1938, ch. 49, § 3, 52 Stat. 111, changed the wording of Section 5(c) to its present form; they also made FTC orders final and eliminated the need for commission enforcement proceedings. But these changes did not expand or alter the class of persons who could petition to review an FTC cease and desist order. Cf. Holloway v. Bristol-Myers Corporation, 158 U.S.App.D.C. 207, 485 F.2d 986, 997 (1973).

Section 10(b) of the APA does not give this Court jurisdiction to hear Consumers' petitions because Section 5(c) of the FTCA, together with Section 10(a) of the APA, denies judicial review to parties not subject to an FTC cease and desist order.[26]

We grant the motion to dismiss Consumers' petitions.

Consumers filed their petitions in this Court before ITT Continental and Bates petitioned to the Second Circuit. These cases were transferred to this Court only because of the prior filings by Consumers. Because we hold that this Court has no jurisdiction to hear Consumers' petitions, we grant the motion of ITT Continental and Bates to transfer their cases to the Second Circuit.

[26] We need not reach such issues as whether the Consumers have standing here, whether Consumers are "persons aggrieved" within the meaning of Section 10(b), and whether Section 10(b) grants jurisdiction to a court of appeals, as distinguished from a district court.

v.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ET AL.*

Civ. A. No. 1180-71.

(United States District Court, District of Columbia, July 1, 1975)

William Simon, John Bodner, Jr., and Roger C. Simmons, of Howrey, Simon, Baker & Murchison, Washington, D.C., for plaintiffs.

Calvin J. Collier, Gen. Counsel, F.T.C., and Stuart E. Schiffer, Dept. of Justice, for defendants.

Gladys Kessler, of Berlin, Roisman and Kessler, for intervenors.

Before ROBINSON, District Judge.

ORDER

Upon consideration of Intervenors' Motion for Summary Judgment, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, or in the Alternative, for Summary Judgment, Plaintiff's Opposition thereto, and upon consideration of the amended complaint, exhibits, documents and all other papers of record filed in this case, and upon consideration of oral argument by counsel for all parties, it is this 1st day of July, 1975,

Ordered, that this case be remanded to the Defendant Federal Trade Commission for preparation of an Environmental Impact Statement in accordance with Section 102(2)(C) of the National Environmental Policy Act, 42 U.S.C. 4321, et seq.; and it is Further Ordered, that the Octane Posting Trade Regulation Rule be reconsidered by the Defendant Federal Trade Commission in light of said Environmental Impact Statement; and it is Further Ordered, that such Environmental Impact Statement and reconsideration of the Octane Posting Trade Regulation Rule be completed within a period of sixty (60) days from the date of this Order, that the Defendant Federal Trade Commission file such Environmental Impact Statement, such reconsideration of the Octane Posting Trade Regulation Rule, and any documents related thereto with this Court and on all parties within ten (10) days from the completion of the aforementioned sixty (60) day period; and it is Further Ordered, that decision on the portions of Intervenors' Motion for Summary Judgment which pertain to procedural regularity and to whether the Octane Posting Trade Regulation Rule is arbitrary or capricious is deferred pending completion of Defendant Federal Trade Commission's decision-making process.

ATLANTIC RICHFIELD COMPANY v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, et al.*

Civ.A.No. 75-H-884. F.T.C. File No. 99-239.

(United States District Court, Southern District of Texas, Houston Division, July 3, 1975)

1. ACTION FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF AND INJUNCTION AGAINST F.T.C. SUBPOENA WAS NOT WITHIN "UNITED STATES AS DEFENDANT" JURISDICTION OF COURT WHERE U.S. WAS NOT A PARTY TO THE ACTION.

[1] Where United States was not a party to the action, oil company's action for declaratory relief and injunction against enforcement and compliance with Federal Trade Commission subpoenas was not within "United States as defendant" jurisdiction of district court.

2. JURISDICTION OF U.S. COURTS TO HEAR SUITS AGAINST FEDERAL OFFICERS ON WRIT OF MANDAMUS COMMANDING PERFORMANCE OF MINISTERIAL DUTY IS CONFERRED BY STATUTE.

Statute giving district court jurisdiction over actions to compel officers to perform their duties confers jurisdiction on courts of the United States outside the District of Columbia to hear a suit against a federal officer on a writ of mandamus to command him to perform a ministerial duty owed to the plaintiff.

3. STATUTE GIVING DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION OVER ACTION TO COMPEL OFFICERS TO PERFORM THEIR DUTY DID NOT GIVE DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION OVER ACTION ENJOINING ENFORCEMENT OF AND COMPLIANCE WITH F.T.C. SUBPOENA.

District court did not have jurisdiction over action to enjoin enforcement of and compliance with Federal Trade Commission subpoenas on basis of statute giving district courts jurisdiction over actions to compel officers to perform their duties.

4. COURT LACKED JURISDICTION OF ACTION AS ONE ARISING UNDER ACT OF CONGRESS REGULATING COMMERCE AND TRADE WHERE, IN ACTION SEEKING TO ENJOIN ENFORCEMENT OF AND COMPLIANCE WITH F.T.C. SUBPOENA, ALLEGATION COMPLAINED OF PROCEDURAL DEFECTS IN RULES AND REGULATIONS REQUIRING PROMULGATION UNDER ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT.

[2] Where allegations of oil company which sought to enjoin enforcement of and compliance with Federal Trade Commission subpoena complained of defects in procedures which allegedly violated rules and regulations required to be promulgated under the Administrative Procedure Act, district court did not have jurisdiction over the action as one arising under an act of Congress regulating commerce and trade.

5. IN ACTION BROUGHT TO ENJOIN SUBPOENA ENFORCEMENT AND COMPLIANCE, FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT HAD FEDERAL QUESTION JURISDICTION OVER ACTION.

Federal district court had federal question jurisdiction over action brought to enjoin enforcement of and compliance with Federal Trade Commission subpoenas.

* Reported in 398 F.Supp. 1 (1975). Motion for injunction pending appeal denied July 8, 1975; see p. 1407 herein. Atlantic Richfield filed notice of appeal July 8, 1975, denied 5 Cir., July 18, 1975.

6. JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL DISTRICT COURTS ONLY EXTENDS TO ADJUDICATION OF CASES OR CONTROVERSIES.

Federal district court's jurisdiction extends only to the adjudication of cases or controversies.

7. INTERESTS OF ALL PARTICIPANTS WAS NOT SUFFICIENTLY ADVERSE AS TO A JUSTICIABLE CASE OR CONTROVERSY WHERE COMPLIANCE WOULD PROVE JUST AS BURDENSOME TO ALL PARTIES AND WHEN THIRD PARTIES STIPULATED THEY WOULD NOT COMPLY WITH F.T.C. SUBPOENA BEFORE COURT RULED ON VALIDITY OF SUBPOENA ISSUED TO PLAINTIFF.

Where three oil companies which were members of joint venture had stipulated with fourth oil company involved in venture that they would not comply with Federal Trade Commission subpoenas until the fourth oil company had obtained a court ruling as to the validity of the subpoenas, and where compliance with subpoenas would prove just as burdensome to the other three oil companies as to the fourth, interests of the fourth oil company and the other three were not sufficiently adverse so as to give rise to a justiciable case or controversy with respect to fourth oil company's request for injunction prohibiting the other three from complying with subpoenas.

8. F.T.C. SUBPOENAS ARE NOT SELF-ENFORCING: PENALTIES FOR FAILURE TO COMPLY ARE ONLY JUSTIFIED WHERE COURT HAS DIRECTED COMPLIANCE.

Subpoenas issued by the Federal Trade Commission pursuant to an investigation are not self-enforcing, so that one who is subject of a subpoena is under no duty to comply with the subpoena until after enforcement has been ordered by court upon application of the Attorney General, and subject of the subpoena is liable for penalties for failure to comply only if it fails to obey an order of a court which directs compliance.

9. WRITTEN REQUEST TO ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE, DEMONSTRATION OF RELEVANCY AND REASONABLENESS OF SCOPE OF SUBPOENA ARE NECESSARY REQUIREMENTS FOR APPLICATION FOR ISSUANCE OF F.T.C. ADJUDICATIVE SUBPOENA DUCES TECUM.

Application for issuance of adjudicative subpoena duces tecum by Federal Trade Commission requires that the requesting party submit a written request to the administrative law judge, specifying the material to be produced and demonstrating the relevancy of the requested material and reasonableness of the scope of the subpoena; motion to quash may be filed in response to the application and the administrative law judge thereafter determines propriety of permitting the requested discovery.

10. ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE'S DECISION TO ISSUE SUBPOENA IS APPEALABLE TO THE FULL COMMISSION: DECISION OF COMMISSION IS APPEALABLE TO U.S. COURT OF APPEALS.

After administrative law judge has ruled on whether adjudicative subpoena duces tecum should be issued by Federal Trade Commission, the decision may be appealed to the full Commission and the Commission may adopt, modify, or set aside the findings and conclusions of the administrative law judge; decision of the Commission is appealable to the United States Court of Appeals.

11. SUBJECT OF SUBPOENA HAD NO STANDING TO ENJOIN F.T.C. FROM ATTEMPTING TO ENFORCE ITS SUBPOENA SINCE THE SUBPOENA WAS NOT SELF-ENFORCING: IT REQUIRED COURT DIRECTION OF COMPLIANCE.

Since subpoena duces tecum issued by the Federal Trade Commission investigative staff and approved by members of the Commission is not self-enforcing, oil company which was subject of subpoena but which was under no court order to comply with the subpoena, and thus under no duty to do so, did not have standing to bring action against Federal Trade Commission to enjoin an attempt to enforce the subpoena.

12. IN DETERMINING WHETHER SUBPOENA SHOULD BE ENFORCED, ONE CRITERIA COURT MUST CONSIDER IS F.T.C.'S AUTHORITY TO SUBPOENA INFORMATION.

[3] Federal Trade Commission authority to subpoena information during an investigation is one of the criteria to be evaluated by court in determining whether subpoena should be enforced.

13. STATUTORY RIGHT TO REVIEW CONSTITUTES SPEEDY AND ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

All constitutional, jurisdictional, substantive, and procedural issues arising in Federal Trade Commission proceedings may be considered in an appeal to the Court of Appeals from action of FTC; statutory right to review constitutes a speedy and adequate remedy at law.

14. WHERE NO FINAL AGENCY ACTION HAD BEEN TAKEN, ACTION WAS NOT RIPE FOR REVIEW BY PLAINTIFF.

Oil company's contention that adjudicative proceeding would be infected with procedural irregularities by garnering of pertinent information in extrajudicial proceedings through Federal Trade Commission subpoena, which oil company sought to enjoin, was not ripe for review where no final agency action had been taken and administrative law judge had not yet reviewed the oil company's contentions regarding impropriety and irregularities surrounding the issuance of the subpoena.

15. REQUIREMENT THAT LITIGANT EXHAUST ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES BEFORE SEEKING JUDICIAL REVIEW IS A COROLLARY TO PERMITTING JUDICIAL REVIEW OF ONLY FINAL AGENCY ACTION.

Corollary to permitting judicial review of only final agency action is the requirement that a litigant exhaust administrative remedies before seeking judicial review.

16. LACK OF EXHAUSTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION PRECLUDES JUDICIAL RELIEF FROM SUPPOSED OR THREATENED INJURY FROM AGENCY ACTION.

No one is entitled to judicial relief from supposed or threatened injury from agency action until the prescribed administrative remedy has been exhausted.

17. POSSIBILITY OF COMPLAINING PARTY ULTIMATELY PREVAILING IN ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDING; QUESTIONS REQUIRING FACTUAL DETERMINATION ARISING; AND RESOLUTION OF FACT QUESTIONS DURING PROCEEDINGS, ALL OF WHICH MAY CANCEL NEED FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW, ARE GROUNDS FOR EXHAUSTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES DOCTRINE.

Doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies is grounded upon considerations that the complaining party may ultimately prevail in the administrative proceeding, that fact questions may be presented which require factual determinations more properly addressed to the expertise of an agency than to a federal district court, and that resolution of the fact questions by the agency may effectively reduce or eliminate the need for judicial review.

18. WHERE AVOIDANCE OF NORMAL COST OF ADMINISTRATIVE LITIGATION IS ONE MERIT OF REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW, INTERVENTION BY COURT IS UNJUSTIFIED.

Judicial intervention is not justified where the merits of a jurisdictional attack on agency action are far from clear and one of the injuries sought to be avoided is the normal cost of administrative litigation.

19. PLAINTIFF FAILED TO EXHAUST ITS ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES WHERE NO FINAL AGENCY ACTION HAD OCCURRED IN PROCEEDINGS.

Oil company which sought to enjoin any attempts of Federal Trade Commission to enforce subpoena directed against the oil company had not yet suffered any legal wrong giving it standing to complain about the issuance of the investigative subpoena as, where administrative law judge had not yet ruled on contentions of the oil company regarding the subpoena, no final agency action had occurred in the adjudicative proceeding for which judicial review was appropriate; oil company had not exhausted its administrative remedies.

20. ALLEGED RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN ADJUDICATIVE AND INVESTIGATORY PROCEEDINGS DOES NOT EXCUSE PLAINTIFF FROM DOCTRINE OF EXHAUSTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES.

Where Federal Trade Commission had violated no rights secured by statute or regulation by merely issuing investigative subpoena, which it had not attempted to enforce, against oil company which, in addition to being subject of the investigation, was also subject of an adjudicative proceeding, and where judicial review of any agency action relating to the adjudicative proceeding remained [4] available, oil company was not excused from requirement of exhausting administrative remedies merely because of the alleged relationship between the adjudicative proceeding and the investigative proceeding.

21. AGENCY DENIES ITSELF OF RIGHT TO VIOLATE RULES OF PROCEDURE ONCE THOSE RULES ARE PROMULGATED.

When an administrative agency promulgates rules to govern its proceedings, those rules must be scrupulously observed and, once the agency has created procedural rules under which its actions are to be judged, it denies itself the right to violate those rules.

22. PREJUDICE ARISING FROM VIOLATION OF PROCEDURAL RULES PRECLUDES ANY ACTION TAKEN AS A RESULT OF STANDING.

Agency's violation of its own procedural rules, from which prejudice results, precludes any action taken as a result of the proceedings from standing.

23. REQUEST FOR DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF WAS RIPE FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW WITH RESPECT TO VIOLATION OF DUE PROCESS OR REGULATORY PROCEDURAL RIGHTS WHERE PLAINTIFF WAS SUBJECT TO BOTH ADMINISTRATIVE AND INVESTIGATORY PROCEEDINGS AND SUBPOENA REQUIRED INFORMATION AGRUABLY RELATED TO PREVIOUSLY CONVENED ADJUDICATORY PROCEEDING.

Where oil company was subject of both Federal Trade Commission adjudicative proceeding and FTC investigative proceeding, with respect to which subpoena duces tecum had been issued, oil company's request for declaratory and injunctive relief prohibiting enforcement of the subpoena was ripe for judicial review with respect to question of whether, once investigative proceeding has been commenced by an agency after the institution of an adjudicative proceeding, the agency violates due process of regulatory procedural rights of the adjudicative respondent by issuing a subpoena duces tecum which requires production of information arguably related to the previously convened adjudicative proceeding.

24. JURISDICTION TO GRANT OR DENY PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION RESTS WITHIN THE COURT'S DISCRETION.

Granting or denying preliminary injunction rests within the discretion of the court.

25. LIKELIHOOD OF PREVAILING ON MERITS, IRREPARABLE HARM, POTENTIAL HARM TO PLAINTIFF IF INJUNCTION IS DENIED AND PUBLIC INTEREST ARE FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN DETERMINING WHETHER INJUNCTIVE RELIEF IS WARRANTED.

Factors to be considered in determining whether preliminary injunctive relief is appropriate are whether plaintiff is likely to prevail on the merits, whether plaintiff is in danger of suffering irreparable harm, whether potential harm to defendants from issuance of the injunction outweighs possible harm to plaintiff if injunctive relief is denied, and whether issuance of preliminary injunction will serve the public interest.

26. F.T.C. MAY CONDUCT INVESTIGATIONS AND ADJUDICATIONS SIMULTANEOUSLY BECAUSE OF F.T.C.'S BROAD INVESTIGATIVE POWER.

Investigative power of the Federal Trade Commission is very broad; FTC may conduct investigations and adjudications simultaneously.

27. WHILE F.T.C. INVESTIGATION IS SIMILAR TO GRAND JURY SEARCH FOR INFORMATION; F.T.C. ADJUDICATION TESTS SUCH EVIDENCE AS RESULTS FROM SUCH INVESTIGATION BEFORE AN INDEPENDANT EXAMINER.

Investigation by Federal Trade Commission is similar to search by a grand jury for information, and FTC may pursue production of information by subpoena, while an adjudication by the FTC tests such evidence as results from an investigation upon a record in an adversary proceeding before an independent examiner.

28. PROTECTION OF DUE PROCESS CLAUSE OF FIFTH AMENDMENT IS AFFORDED TO PARTY OF F.T.C. ADJUDICATIVE PROCEEDING.

Party to an adjudicative proceeding conducted by the Federal Trade Commission is afforded the protection of the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment.

29. F.T.C. MAY USE ANY INFORMATION PRODUCED DURING INVESTIGATIVE PROCEEDINGS IN ANY RESULTING ADJUDICATIVE PROCEEDING.

Information which is produced during investigative proceedings conducted by the Federal Trade Commission may be used by the Commission in any adjudicative proceeding which may result.

30. F.T.C. REGULATION MAKING INFORMATION OBTAINED FROM INVESTIGATIVE PROCEEDINGS ADMISSIBLE IN ADJUDICATORY PROCEEDING.

Federal Trade Commission regulation which specifically makes informa[5]tion obtained in investigations admissible in an adjudicative proceeding is valid.

31. A "CORDON SANITAIRE" IS NOT ESTABLISHED MERELY BY PENDENCY OF F.T.C. ADJUDICATORY PROCEEDING.

Mere pendency of Federal Trade Commission adjudicative proceeding does not establish a "cordon sanitaire" of permissible discovery, impeding the progress of other related investigative proceedings; party which is subject of adjudicative proceedings, although entitled to due process concerning that proceeding, is not protected from issuance of FTC subpoena duces tecum requiring it to produce documents in connection with a related investigative proceeding merely because the investigation is on a subject related to the adjudicative proceeding.

32. F.T.C. IS PRESUMED TO ABIDE BY ITS REGULATIONS ONCE AN ADJUDICATORY PROCEEDING IS INITIATED.

Once an adjudicative proceeding begins, Federal Trade Commission is presumed to abide by its regulations and should not thereafter be restricted to investigate in only totally distinguishable industries or companies which have no relation whatsoever to any adjudicative respondent.

33. PLAINTIFF WAS NOT ENTITLED TO INJUNCTION AGAINST ENFORCEMENT OF SUBPOENA WHERE PLAINTIFF FAILED TO MEET FACTORS CONSIDERED IN DETERMINING WHETHER INJUNCTIVE RELIEF IS WARRANTED

Where oil company which was subject of adjudicative proceeding and investigative proceeding was not likely to suffer any harm, where there would be substantial potential harm to Federal Trade Commission and to the public interest if oil company's request for injunction against attempt to enforce the subpoena were issued, and where oil company was not likely to succeed on the merits, it was not entitled to injunction against any FTC attempt to enforce the subpoena in connection with the investigative proceeding merely because the oil company was a subject of, and the information sought was arguably related to, an FTC adjudicative proceeding.

On Motion for Injunction Pending Appeal

34. LIKELIHOOD OF SUCCESS ON MERITS, IRREPARABLE HARM, HARM TO OTHER INTERESTED PARTIES, AND PUBLIC INTEREST ARE CONSIDERATIONS IN CONNECTION WITH MOTION FOR INJUNCTION AGAINST SUBPOENA ENFORCEMENT PLAINTIFF MUST MEET.

Considerations in connection with motion for injunction against enforcement of court order and final judgment pending appeal to Court of Appeals are that the applicant make a strong showing that it is likely to succeed on the merits of the appeal, that the applicant establish that, unless a stay is granted, it will suffer irreparable injury, that no substantial harm will come to other interested parties, and that a stay will do no harm to the public interests.

35. WHERE PLAINTIFF FAILED TO MEET CONSIDERATIONS NECESSARY FOR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF FROM SUBPOENA ENFORCEMENT ACTION, PLAINTIFF WAS NOT ENTITLED TO SUCH INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.

Where oil company which sought to enjoin Federal Trade Commission from attempting to enforce subpoena duces tecum was not likely to succeed on the merits where oil company was not under any present duty to comply with the subpoena, so that it would not be irreparably harmed if injunction pending appeal were denied, and where administrative remedies continued to be available to the oil company, oil company was not entitled to injunction against enforcement of district court order pending appeal.

On motion for preliminary injunction, court held there was no justiciable controversy between joint ventures; administrative remedies had not been exhausted; that F.T.C. was not procluded from obtaining information relative to adjudicatory proceeding through an investigatory proceeding; and plaintiff failed to meet criteria necessary for injunctive relief.

Preliminary injunction and injunction pending appeal denied.

MEMORANDUM AND OPINION

CARL O. BUE, JR., District Judge.

I. INTRODUCTION

[6] Plaintiff has filed suit in this Court seeking to enjoin the defendant Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") and defendant members of the Commission from attempting to enforce a subpoena duces tecum issued to plaintiff pursuant to an investigation of the natural gas industry being conducted by the FTC. Plaintiff also seeks to enjoin three other corporations, defendants Getty Oil Company ("Getty"), Continental Oil Company ("Conoco") and Cities Service Company ("Citgo"), from complying with similar FTC subpoenas issued to them which arise out of the same investigation. Plaintiff and the three corporate defendants are joint venturers in "CAGC", a joint venture formed for the purpose of conducting offshore explorations for natural gas and oil.

For the reasons stated herein, the Court concludes that no justiciable case or controversy is presented between plaintiff and the corporate defendants. As to the controversy between plaintiff and the FTC, to the extent that the issues are now ripe for adjudication on the merits, the equities clearly preponderate in favor of the FTC. The plaintiff's motions for preliminary injunction and declaratory relief are therefore denied.

II. FACTS

Plaintiff is a respondent in an adjudicative proceeding[1] now pending before an Administrative Law Judge. In the Matter of Exxon Corporation, FTC Docket No. 8934 (July 17, 1973) ("Exxon proceeding"). The proceeding was initiated by the FTC against plaintiff and seven other major oil producing companies in the United States on July 17, 1973. The complaint filed by the FTC alleges violations by the respondents of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a),[2] in that the respondents are allegedly: (1) performing acts or practices which constitute a combination or agreement to monopolize the refining of crude oil into petroleum products; (2) maintaining monopoly power over the refining of crude oil into petroleum products; and (3) restraining trade and maintaining a noncompetitive market structure in the refining of crude oil into petroleum products. The relevant market includes the northeastern, southeastern and southwestern United States. Plaintiff's Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief at 4 (June 3, 1975).

Subsequent to initiating this adjudicative proceeding, the FTC undertook a study of the conduct, performance and structure of the natural gas industry on April 16, 1974. FTC File 741 0019. The study was commenced at the direction of the Congress, pursuant to P.L. 93-135, in order to supplement an ongoing study previously limited to the petroleum industry and to document the impact of the effects of decisions by government departments and agencies on the price and supply of energy. H.R. No. 93-520, 93rd Cong., 1st Sess. (September 20, 1973). The Congressional mandate authorized an appropriation for the study, and the FTC was directed to report its findings at the earliest practicable time to the Congress. Id. at 24.

[1] An adjudicative proceeding is a formal proceeding conducted under one or more of the statutes administered by the FTC which is required by statute to be determined on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing. 16 C.F.R. § 3.2; 15 U.S.C. § 45(b).

[2] "Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared unlawful." 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1).

On March 13, 1975, the staff conducting the FTC investigation issued subpoenas duces tecum to plaintiff and the three corporate defendants, as joint venturers in CAGC, a sample entity doing business in the energy industry, to require disclosure of the manner in which joint venturers explore for, develop, pro[7]duce and sell natural gas. Plaintiff moved to quash the subpoenas duces tecum on several grounds on April 11, 1975, but the defendant members of the Commission denied the motion by order of May 12, 1975,[3] and established June 9, 1975, as the deadline for compliance with the subpoenas.[4] Plaintiff filed suit in this Court on June 3, 1975, to avoid having to comply with its subpoena.

III. JURISDICTION

The Court turns first to the question of subject matter jurisdiction. Plaintiff alleges that jurisdiction is conferred on this Court by 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1337, 1346, 1361, and 5 U.S.C. § 704. The matter in controversy allegedly exceeds the sum of $10,000, and declaratory relief thus is rested upon 28 U.S.C. § 2201. Plaintiff further contends that the action is brought to remedy alleged violations of the Fifth Amendment, the Administrative Procedure Act ("APA"), 5 U.S.C. § 551 et seq., and the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 41 et seq., and its rules of procedure, 16 C.F.R. Parts 0-4 (1975).

[1-3] As this Court views these contentions, jurisdiction is not proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1346 because the United States is not a party to this action. Furthermore, jurisdiction is not proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1361. That statute confers jurisdiction on courts of the United States outside of the District of Columbia to hear a suit against a federal officer on a writ of mandamus to command him to perform a ministerial duty owed to plaintiff. E. g., Jarrett v. Resor, 426 F.2d 213 (9th Cir. 1970). Section 1361 was not meant to confer authority in the instant situation. Plaintiff points to no "ministerial" duty owed to it, but rather alleges that its own rights before an administrative law judge may conceivably be violated. Prairie Band of Potawatomie Tribe of Indians v. Udall, 355 F.2d 364, 367 (10th Cir. 1966); Davis, Administrative Law Treatise, § 23.10 at 805-06 (1970 Supp.). But cf. Byse and Fiocca, Section 1361 of the Mandamus and Venue Act of 1962 and "Nonstatutory" Judicial Review of Federal Administrative Action, 81 Harv. L.Rev. 308 (1967).

[3] The Commission did modify the subpoena to permit coordination of effort between joint venturers so as to eliminate duplicative compilations of material possessed by more than one joint venturer.

[4] The deadline has been re-set to July 7, 1975, without opposition in order to accommodate the docket of this Court.

[4] Based on the allegations contained in plaintiff's complaint, Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Texaco, Inc., 415 U.S. 125, 94 S.Ct. 1002, 39 L.Ed.2d 209 (1974), jurisdiction is not proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1337. Plaintiff's allegations relate to defects in procedure which allegedly violate rules and regulations required to be promulgated under the APA. The suit as framed does not arise under the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, and jurisdiction therefore cannot rest on 28 U.S.C. § 1337.

[5] Plaintiff's allegations do state a cause of action which arises under the Constitution and laws of the United States. The Court therefore views jurisdiction as proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. 13 Wright, Miller & Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 3562 (1975).[5]

IV. JUSTICIABILITY: CASE OR CONTROVERSY

[8] [6] This Court's jurisdiction extends only to the adjudication of cases or controversies. In this case, there is a serious question as to whether a proper case or controversy is presented between plaintiff and the three corporate defendants. These defendants were served by the FTC with investigative subpoenas similar to the one issued to plaintiff. Aside from its Fifth Amendment due process contention, plaintiff also objects to the subpoenas on the grounds of irrelevancy, overbreadth and confidentiality of material requested. The Court also notes that the FTC resolution authorizing the instant investigation pursuant to Congressional mandate explicitly recites that any information received during the investigation may be utilized by the FTC to conduct investigations of possible violations of the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 21, and the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45.

Within the confines of this suit, plaintiff seeks to put distance between itself and the other joint venturers by pointing out their presumably dissimilar positions. Their interests allegedly are adverse to plaintiff's solely because they are not respondents as is plaintiff in the Exxon proceeding, and because their possible compliance with the investigative subpoenas could result in a disclosure of information damaging to plaintiff, since they possess some information which duplicates that which is in plaintiff's files.

[7] The Court concludes that the interests of plaintiff and the corporate defendants in the instant suit are not sufficiently adverse so as to give rise to a justiciable case or controversy. Plaintiff asserts on the one hand that the corporate defendants will comply with the subpoenas issued by the FTC, but plaintiff also has succeeded in gaining stipulations from them whereby they agree to withhold compliance until plaintiff can obtain a ruling from this Court resolving the matters at issue. The three corporate defendants have filed no brief or otherwise indicated any opposition to plaintiff's position. Realistically, their positions cannot be viewed as inconsistent with the arguments advanced by plaintiff to the FTC in April, especially with respect to the contention that the investigative subpoenas are irrelevant, overbroad, or request confidential information. Certainly, compliance with allegedly irrelevant and overbroad subpoenas would prove just as burdensome to Getty, Conoco and Citgo as to plaintiff. Additionally, it simply cannot be assumed that these three joint venturers are more anxious than plaintiff to submit information which may prompt an investigative agency to spearhead further inquiries into possible statutory violations.

[5] [7] Plaintiff's complaint alleges that more than $10,000 is in controversy. However, plaintiff's complaint nowhere else mentions any amount in controversy, nor does plaintiff sue for any damages, except to pray for "other relief as may be just and proper". Commentators have suggested that federal question cases involving interpretation of the APA obviate the need for the presence of a jurisdictional amount when a review of agency action is involved. Davis, Administrative Law Treatise, supra, § 23.02 at 789-91; e. g., Rusk v. Cort, 369 U.S. 367, 82 S.Ct. 787, 7 L.Ed.2d 809 (1962). The Court concludes from the pleadings that jurisdiction is proper in this case under 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

In short, this Court concludes, as has the United States Supreme Court in another context, Moore v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education, 402 U.S. 47, 91 S.Ct. 1292, 28 L.Ed.2d 590 (1971), that both plaintiff and the corporate defendants seek the same or a similar result from this litigation. There is, therefore, no present case or controversy between them, and for that reason the three corporate defendants are hereby dismissed from this action.

V. JUSTICIABILITY: STANDING AND RIPENESS

A. Introduction

The APA confers standing to sue upon a person or organization which has suffered a legal wrong because of agency action. 5 U.S.C. § 702. Additionally, the APA defines those actions which are reviewable by a court of the United States, including "final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court." 5 U.S.C. § 704.

Taken together, these statutory requirements contribute to a determination as to whether plaintiff has standing to bring this action and whether the action is ripe for judicial review. Conceptually, "standing" and "ripeness" represent different legal notions and occupy [9] different spheres in the realm of justiciability. Within the context of judicial review of administrative actions, however, those distinctions become somewhat blurred. In this case, standing and ripeness must be evaluated against the mechanism of review already provided by the statutes and regulations.

B. Review of the Issuance of an FTC Subpoena Duces Tecum

1. Enforcement of the FTC Subpoena

[8] Subpoenas issued by the FTC pursuant to an investigation are not self-enforcing. Only courts of the United States may enforce such subpoenas upon application by the Attorney General. 15 U.S.C. § 49. Thus, plaintiff is under no present duty to comply with the subpoena and is subject to penalties for failure to comply only if it fails to obey the order of a court which subsequently directs compliance at the conclusion of a hearing instituted by the FTC. Id.

2. Requests for Information in the Exxon Proceeding

[9] Pretrial discovery in an adjudicative proceeding brought by the FTC is circumscribed by detailed agency rules. 16 C.F.R. §§ 3.31-3.39. Application for issuance of an adjudicative subpoena duces tecum, described in 16 C.F.R. § 3.34(b), requires that the requesting party submit a written request to the Administrative Law Judge, specifying the material to be produced and demonstrating the relevancy of the requested material and the reasonableness of the scope of the subpoena. 16 C.F.R. § 3.34(b)(1). A motion to quash may be filed in response to this application, Id., and the Administrative Law Judge thereafter determines the propriety of permitting the requested discovery. 16 C.F.R. § 3.35.

The rules further describe the procedures to be followed during the course of the hearing on the substantive charges. 16 C.F.R. §§ 3.41-3.46. Information obtained in investigations is specifically made admissible in an adjudicative proceeding. 16 C.F.R. § 3.43(c).

3. Appeal of a Decision in the Exxon Proceeding

[10] At the conclusion of the adjudicative hearing, a decision is rendered by the Administrative Law Judge. 16 C.F.R. § 3.51. This decision may be appealed to the Commission, 16 C.F.R. § 3.52, and the Commission may adopt, modify or set aside the findings and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge. 16 C.F.R. § 3.54. Additionally, the rules provide for an interlocutory appeal of a decision by the Administrative Law Judge prior to the time of the hearing. 16 C.F.R. § 3.23(b).

Once the Commission has completed its review of the adjudicative proceedings, it decides whether cease-and-desist orders should be issued for those actions which are proved to be in violation of a statute. 15 U.S.C. § 45(b). This decision is appealable to a United States Court of Appeals, which has exclusive jurisdiction to review the orders of the

FTC. 15 U.S.C. §§ 45(c) and (d). The Court of Appeals may affirm, enforce, modify or set aside orders of the Commission. Id.

C. Standing and Ripeness in the Instant Case

Recognizing the different statutory and regulatory characteristics of adjudicative versus investigative proceedings, the Court first isolates each proceeding under the scope of the APA to determine whether judicial review is appropriate at this time. On this basis, plaintiff does not now appear to have standing to challenge any alleged irregularity in the conduct of the natural gas investigation; and alleged irregularities in the conduct of pretrial discovery in the Exxon adjudicative proceeding do not now appear to be ripe for judicial review. This latter conclusion is reached not only upon considerations of "ripeness," but also upon a consideration of the doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies.

1. The Investigative Proceeding

[10] [11] As noted previously, a subpoena duces tecum issued by the FTC investigative staff and approved by the members of the Commission is not self-enforcing. Plaintiff is under no present duty to comply with the instant investigative subpoena, in light of the necessity for a determination by a court of the United States as to whether the subpoena is worthy of enforcement. The FTC must request the Attorney General of the United States to seek such enforcement, and the burden of proof rests with the Government.

[12] Plaintiff does not appear to have standing to sue in the present posture of the case. Being under no present duty to comply, plaintiff has as yet suffered no legal wrong because of the issuance of the investigative subpoenas. Also, plaintiff has an adequate judicial forum in which to challenge the subject subpoenas on the same grounds proffered in the instant case because of the requirements of 15 U.S.C. § 49. Indeed, adjudication of enforcement at this stage would completely duplicate and preempt the breadth and depth of a proper judicial inquiry conducted pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49. Agency authority to subpoena information during an investigation is one of the criteria to be evaluated by the "enforcement" court to determine whether the subpoena should be enforced. Adams v. F.T.C., 296 F.2d 861 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 864, 82 S.Ct. 1029, 8 L.Ed.2d 83 (1961).

2. The Adjudicative Proceeding

[13] Jurisdiction to review agency action taken as the result of findings of an adjudicative proceeding reposes exclusively with the United States Court of Appeals. 15 U.S.C. §§ 21(d), 45(b). As the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has emphasized, all constitutional, jurisdictional, substantive and procedural issues arising in Commission proceedings may be considered in an appeal, and this statutory right to review has long been viewed as constituting a speedy and adequate remedy at law. Frito-Lay, Inc. v. F.T.C., 380 F.2d 8, 9-10 (5th Cir.1967).

[14] Plaintiff's contention that the adjudicative proceeding will be infected with procedural irregularities by the garnering of pertinent information in extra-judicial proceedings does not now appear ripe for review. Jurisdiction of complaints about alleged adjudicative irregularities usually resides exclusively with the Court of Appeals. Additionally, no final agency action has been taken within the context of the adjudicative proceeding, 5 U.S.C. § 704, since the Administrative Law Judge has not yet had any opportunity to review the instant contentions.

FTC rules and regulations provide plaintiff with ample opportunities to object to the manner in which the FTC Complaint Counsel conducts discovery, obtains documents, or otherwise allegedly attempts to circumvent administrative procedures during the Exxon proceeding. A finding by the Administrative Law Judge that members of the Complaint Counsel's staff conducted themselves improperly during the discovery stage of the adjudication would merit exclusion of evidence so discovered or even dismissal of the complaint. 5 U.S.C. § 556. Further, the order and findings rendered by the judge and approved by the Commission are subject to review by the Court of Appeals. 16 C.F.R. § 3.54; see Borden, Inc. v. F.T.C., 495 F.2d 785, 787 & n.5 (7th Cir. 1974). An allegation of denial of due process can be raised properly at that time with full relief available to plaintiff.

D. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies Doctrine

[15] The corollary to permitting judicial review of only final agency action is the requirement that a litigant exhaust administrative remedies before seeking judicial review, a doctrine well established in the jurisprudence of administrative law. McKart v. United States, 395 U.S. 185, 89 S.Ct. 1657, 23 [11] L.Ed.2d 194 (1969); American General Ins. Co. v. F.T.C., 496 F.2d 197 (5th Cir. 1974).

[16,17] As the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has recognized, e.g., Bokat v. Tidewater Equipment Co., 363 F.2d 667 (5th Cir. 1966), no one is entitled to judicial relief for a supposed or threatened injury until the prescribed administrative remedy has been exhausted. 363 F.2d at 671 quoting Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U.S. 41, 50-51, 58 S.Ct. 459, 82 L.Ed. 638 (1938). The doctrine is grounded upon several considerations: (1) the complaining party may ultimately prevail in the administrative proceeding; (2) fact questions may be presented which require factual determinations more properly addressed to the expertise of an agency than to a federal district court; and (3) resolution of these fact questions by the agency may effectively reduce or eliminate entirely the need for judicial review. 363 F.2d at 671-72.

[18] Since the doctrine represents a general guideline rather than an inflexible command, it is not without exceptions. Bristol-Myers Co. v. F.T.C., 469 F.2d 1116, 1118 (2d Cir. 1972). Several courts have reached the merits of questions not exhausted by administrative review,[6] and at least three pertinent exceptions have come to be recognized: (1) where the agency has clearly violated a right secured by statute or agency regulation, Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184, 188-89, 79 S.Ct. 180, 3 L.Ed.2d 210 (1958); (2) where the issue involved is a strictly legal one, McKart v. United States, supra, 395 U.S. at 197-99, 89 S.Ct. 1657; or (3) where the issue cannot be raised upon judicial review of a later order of the agency, Jewel Companies, Inc. v. F.T.C., 432 F.2d 1155, 1159 (7th Cir. 1970).[7]

E. Propriety of Reviewing Plaintiff's "Unexhausted" Claims

[19] Plaintiff has not yet suffered any legal wrong which gives it standing to complain about the issuance of the investigative subpoenas. 5 U.S.C. § 702. No final agency action has yet occurred in the adjudicative proceeding for which judicial review is now appropriate. 5 U.S.C. § 704.

With no justiciable case or controversy now available to plaintiff as to the conduct of either the investigative or the adjudicative proceedings when viewed separately, plaintiff focuses on the alleged interaction of these two proceedings to suggest the presence of justiciability by fusion. Plaintiff contends that as a respondent in the Exxon adjudicative proceeding, it is entitled to certain procedural protections during the course of pretrial discovery, 5 U.S.C. § 555(d), and that the procedural rules pertinent to adjudicative proceedings, especially 16 C.F.R. § 3.34 (subpoenas duces tecum to issue during adjudicative proceeding only on showing of good cause) and § 4.7 (ex parte communications prohibited between members of FTC investigative and adjudicative staffs and Administrative Law Judge during an adjudicative proceeding), establish a "cordon sanitaire" around the Exxon proceeding.

The purportedly inviolate borders of such a proceeding were allegedly overrun in this case when FTC investigative staff counsel subpoenaed information from the members of CAGC. Such subpoenaed information is alleged to be so closely related to matters being adjudicated in the Exxon proceeding that com[12]pliance by plaintiff or the three corporate defendants with the investigative subpoenas would allegedly permit the FTC to obtain information useful to its pretrial preparation in the Exxon proceeding without first having to justify such a request before the Administrative Law Judge. A denial of due process allegedly results.

[6] For an abridged listing of such cases, see Bannercraft Clothing Co. v. Renegotiation Board, 151 U.S.App.D.C. 174, 466 F.2d 345, 354 n. 7 (1972).

[7] The Fifth Circuit has somewhat blunted the thrust of these exceptions. Judicial intervention is not justified where the merit of a jurisdictional attack is far from clear and one of the injuries sought to be avoided is the normal cost of administrative litigation. Frito-Lay, Inc. v. F.T.C., supra, 380 F.2d at 10.

[20] Analyzing plaintiff's unexhausted claims strains the concept of judicial reviewability to its natural limits. First, no exception to exhaustion seems applicable here: (1) the agency has violated no right secured by statute or regulation merely by issuing an investigative subpoena that it has not yet attempted to enforce;[8] (2) the issue presented is not strictly a legal one because the fact of extensive similarity between investigative and adjudicative information is presumed to exist arguendo by plaintiff; (3) clearly, judicial review of any agency action related to the Exxon proceeding remains available, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 45(b).

Second, and more importantly, the hypothetical nature of plaintiff's thesis cannot be avoided. Plaintiff contends that prejudice amounting to a denial of due process will occur because the sanctity of an already pending adjudicative proceeding will be violated by the receipt of information through an investigation. Such a prognosis of prejudicial error and potential violation of constitutional rights presumes that the information sought in the investigation will be directly pertinent to the adjudicative proceeding. The prognosis further presumes that FTC adjudicative and investigative staffs will engage in mutual conduct violative of agency rules and the APA, and that illicit ex parte communications will be attempted. Finally, the Court is asked to presume that improper agency conduct at the outset caused the investigative subpoena to be issued: the agency's investigative efforts directed at CAGC are alleged to be taken in bad faith, considering the pendency of the Exxon adjudicative proceeding, and plaintiff's involvement therein.

[21, 22] These presumptions do not properly warrant judicial recognition at this time. When an administrative agency promulgates rules to govern its proceedings, these rules must be scrupulously observed. Pacific Molasses Co. v. F.T.C., 356 F.2d 386, 389 (5th Cir. 1966). Once the agency creates procedural rules under which its actions are to be judged, it denies itself the right to violate these rules. United States ex rel. Accardi v. Shaughnessy, 347 U.S. 260, 74 S.Ct. 499, 98 L.Ed. 681 (1957). A violation of procedural rules by an agency from which prejudice results dictates that any action taken as a result of the proceedings cannot stand. Pacific Molasses Co. v. F.T.C., supra, 356 F.2d at 390.

[8] The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has characterized the Leedom v. Kyne exception as being very narrow and rarely successfully invoked. United States v. Feaster, 410 F.2d 1354 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 962, 90 S.Ct. 427, 24 L.Ed.2d 426 (1969).

When a similar due process attack was levelled against the National Labor Relations Board, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit declared:

> The fact that the attack is voiced in conclusory language of a denial of due process and like constitutional rights does not warrant stopping the Board in its tracks. As have others, we have recognized constitutional claims and have accordingly denied enforcement of the Board orders when the Board order comes up for enforcement.

Bokat v. Tidewater Equipment Co., supra, 363 F.2d at 672.

F. Doctrine of Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner

Having examined in detail the plaintiff's arguments as set forth above, this Court is reluctant to conclude that plaintiff has standing at this time to com[13]plain of the decision by the Commission to issue the subpoena, or that the propriety of issuance is now ripe for adjudication, whether the two agency proceedings are viewed separately or together. See generally Annotation, Jurisdiction of Federal District Court to Entertain Attacks on Federal Trade Commission's Actions, 16 A.L.R. Fed. 361 (1973).

The Court would conclude its inquiry at this point and dismiss this case for lack of justiciability were it not for the decisions by the United States Supreme Court in a trilogy of cases headed by Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 18 L.Ed.2d 681 (1967). Plaintiff alludes to these authorities in support of its position. The cases dealt with the issue of pre-enforcement judicial review of challenged agency regulations. Propriety of the issuance of an investigative subpoena was not at issue there, but the Court addressed the question of the ripeness of a challenge to agency action in broad terms.

In the Abbott Laboratories case, the Government propounded several contentions on which to support its position that a challenge to the regulations was not then ripe for review: (1) that the agency could not implement the subject regulations directly, but rather had to rely upon an authorization from the Attorney General of the United States to institute criminal and seizure actions for violations of the statute; (2) that the subject regulations did not have an immediate impact on the companies involved; (3) that the subject regulations could properly be challenged in a subsequent judicial proceeding for enforcement; and (4) that incurring mere financial expense in complying with, or challenging, the regulations did not confer standing on the companies.

The Court rejected all of these contentions and held that: (1) the regulations did not advise the Attorney General of violations, but purported to state directly what was a violation as authorized by statute, 387 U.S. at 151, 87 S.Ct. 1507; (2) the regulations were clear-cut, were effective immediately upon publication and were expected to be complied with, 387 U.S. at 152, 87 S.Ct. 1507, and failure to comply would potentially subject the companies to serious criminal and civil penalties, Id. at 153, 87 S.Ct. 1507; (3) severe and unnecessary harm would befall the companies if they were permitted to raise their challenges to the regulations only as a defense to an action brought by the Government, Id.; and (4) plaintiffs have standing because the regulations are directed specifically at them, Id. at 154, 87 S.Ct. 1507.

The challenged agency action in the instant case is directed at plaintiff, is expected to be complied with and is purported to be directly authorized by statute. Additionally, there is a suggestion in the Abbott Laboratories opinion that allegations of denial of procedural due process by an agency may raise problems particularly appropriate for pre-enforcement judicial review under certain circumstances. This was the interpretation that Mr. Justice Fortas put on the majority opinion. In dissent, he stated: "At least in cases where the claim is of erroneous action rather than the lack of jurisdiction or denial of procedural due process, a suit for injunctive or declaratory relief will not lie . . ." 387 U.S. at 178, 87 S.Ct. at 1532 (Fortas, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). Although he contested the propriety of pre-enforcement judicial review of erroneous agency action, Justice Fortas apparently acknowledged the propriety of such review when an allegation is made that procedural due process has been denied.[9]

[14] Considering the broad language utilized by the Supreme Court in the Abbott Laboratories case, this Court concludes, out of an abundance of caution, that a limited portion of the instant case is arguably ripe for consideration at this time. The standard established for determining ripeness requires an evaluation of the hardship to the parties of withholding court consideration. 387 U.S. at 148, 87 S.Ct. 1507; see Davis, Administrative Law Treatise, supra, chapter 21.

[23] The agency has formalized its position regarding the investigative subpoena; the source of authority on which it bases its actions is clear; and there is no question but that it will seek to enforce the subpoena pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49. Considering the manner in which the Abbott Laboratories majority viewed the available statutory penalties for noncompliance, 15 U.S.C. § 50, there is arguably a hardship on plaintiff if plaintiff ultimately refuses to comply with the subpoena request. More importantly, the Commission may also suffer hardship if plaintiff seeks to enjoin the subpoena by an action similar to the one filed here in other federal district courts.[10]

The Court's consideration of the propriety of declaratory and injunctive relief is thus limited to a single inquiry: when an investigative proceeding has been commenced by an agency after the institution of an adjudicative proceeding, does the agency violate due process and regulatory procedural rights of an adjudicative respondent, also a subject of the investigation, by issuing a subpoena duces tecum to it or any entity which might possess information about its operations, which requires production of documented information that is arguably material to the earlier-convened adjudicative proceeding?[11]

VI. PROPRIETY OF INJUNCTIVE OR DECLARATORY RELIEF

[15] [24,25] Granting or denying a preliminary injunction rests within the discretion of this Court. 11 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 2948, at 427 (1973). The factors to be considered in determining whether preliminary injunctive relief is appropriate are: (1) whether the plaintiff is likely to prevail on the merits; (2) whether the plaintiff is in danger of suffering irreparable harm; (3) whether the potential harm to the defendants from issuance of the injunction outweighs the possible harm to the plaintiff if injunctive relief is denied; (4) whether issuance of a preliminary injunction will serve the public interest. Blackshear Residents Organization v. Romney, 472 F.2d 1197 (5th Cir. 1973).

Applying this test to the facts and arguments now before the Court, the Court concludes that no preliminary injunction should issue and that plaintiff is not entitled to declaratory relief.

[10] That venue is proper to bring this type of action in various courts of the United States is not at all certain. Plaintiff invoked 28 U.S.C. § 1391 as the statute making venue proper in this Court. But on the face of plaintiff's complaint, 28 U.S.C. § 1391 would not seem to apply: (1) § 1391(b) does not apply because not all of the defendants named in the complaint reside in the Southern District of Texas; (2) § 1391(c) does not apply because both corporations and a United States agency (and its officers) are parties; (3) § 1391(e) does not apply because not all of the defendants named in the complaint are officers of a United States agency.

Even if the complaint is viewed with the corporate defendants deleted in the absence of a justiciable case or controversy as to them, § 1391(e) would still not apply in this case. None of the four places where the action may be brought under § 1391(e) is the Southern District of Texas: (a) no agency defendant resides here; (b) the cause of action did not arise here; (c) no real property is involved in this action; and (d) plaintiff does not reside here for purposes of venue because plaintiff was not incorporated in this State.

While § 1391(c) makes the proper venue of a corporation sued any judicial district in which it is licensed to do business, the courts have unanimously held that such a definition of residence does not apply to corporate plaintiffs, and venue as to them is proper only in the district(s) in which they were incorporated. American Cyanamid Co. v. Hammond Lead Products, Inc., 495 F.2d 1183, 1185 (3rd Cir. 1974); Manchester Modes, Inc. v. Schuman, 426 F.2d 629 (2d Cir. 1970). The Supreme Court expressly declined to rule upon this issue in Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner. See 387 U.S. at 156 n. 20, 87 S.Ct. 1507.

Despite the probable absence of proper venue in this district, defendants have raised no objection at this time, and the Court will proceed to rule on the issues presented.

[11] The Court emphasizes the limited nature of the inquiry on the merits exercised in this case. The Court still is of the opinion that the case is probably not ripe for review insofar as the issues are framed in plaintiff's complaint and supporting memoranda. However, stripped of allegations of agency conduct taken in bad faith during the investigation and potential illegal actions by agency counsel during pretrial procedures in the Exxon adjudicative proceeding, plaintiff's complaint presents the narrow, arguably justiciable, question framed above.

[26] It is well settled that the investigative power of the FTC, exercised pursuant to § 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 46, is very broad. United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 70 S.Ct. 357, 94 L.Ed. 401 (1950). The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has held that the FTC may conduct investigations and adjudications simultaneously. Genuine Parts Co. v. F.T.C., 445 F.2d 1382, 1388 (5th Cir. 1971) citing Lehigh Portland Cement Co. v. F.T.C., 291 F.Supp. 628 (E.D.Va.1968), aff'd per curiam, 416 F.2d 971 (4th Cir. 1969).

[27-29] In the Genuine Parts case, the Court of Appeals delineated the different functions served by investigative and adjudicative proceedings. The investigation has been likened to the search by a grand jury for information, cf. Sutro Bros. & Co. v. S.E.C., 199 F.Supp. 439 (S.D.N.Y.1961), and the FTC may pursue production of information by subpoena. F.T.C. v. Tuttle, 244 F.2d 605, 609 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 354 U.S. 925, 77 S.Ct. 1379, 1 L.Ed.2d 1436 (1957). The adjudication tests such evidence as results from an investigation upon a record in an adversary proceeding before an independent hearing examiner. Genuine Parts Co. v. F.T.C., supra, 445 F.2d at 1388. A party to an adjudicative proceeding is afforded the protection of the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. Hannah v. Larche, 363 U.S. 420, 80 S.Ct. 1502,4 L.Ed.2d 1307 (1960). Information which is produced during an investigative proceeding may be used by the Commission in any adjudicative proceeding which may result.

The regulations of the FTC authorize the use of information gleaned from an investigation during an adjudicative proceeding. 16 C.F.R. § 3.43(c). Plaintiff essentially attacks the validity of this regulation. In doing so, plaintiff also attacks the propriety of the institution of an investigation on one subject after an adjudicative proceeding has commenced on a different, though arguably related, subject. To this end, plaintiff's due process argument logically points to the conclusion that the authority of the FTC, as an investigative agency, must be restricted as to subject matter and scope where the agency attempts to glean information from an investigatee which is also a respondent, and from any organization which may possess information generated by, or pertaining to, that respondent.

[30] The Court concludes that 16 C.F.R. § 3.43(c) is valid and should be upheld. The FTC investigation will not be halted at this stage solely because of the simultaneous occurrence of adjudicative and investigative proceedings. Genuine Parts Co. v. F.T.C., supra. There is nothing in the record to suggest any irregularity in the manner in which the investigation is being conducted, and the FTC actions are entitled to a presumption of regularity. United States v. Morgan, 313 U.S. 409, 61 S.Ct. 999, 85 L.Ed. 1429 (1941); United States v. [16] Chemical Foundation, 272 U.S. 1, 47 S.Ct. 1, 71 L.Ed. 131 (1926). From an examination of the present record it is apparent that the boundaries of the broad framework provided by the Congress within which the FTC is to conduct this study of the energy industry have not been violated.

[31] The mere pendency of an adjudicative proceeding does not establish a cordon sanitaire of permissible discovery, impeding the progress of any other proceeding in its path. Clearly, the authority of the agency to utilize information derived from an investigation in a subsequent adjudication, United States v. Litton Industries, Inc., 462 F.2d 14 (9th Cir. 1972), defeats a suggestion of the total sanctity of adjudicative discovery. Plaintiff as an adjudicative respondent is entitled to due process during the pendency of the Exxon proceeding, but such due process is not violated, nor are its safeguards diminished, solely because an investigation is subsequently commenced on a related subject.

[32] The interdependence of business entities in our economy and the interrelation of many types of business transactions which are subject to regulation and review by agencies substantially reduce those areas of inquiry which are so isolated as to have no effect on other markets, companies or transactions. Once an adjudicative proceeding begins, the FTC is presumed to abide by its regulations and should not thereafter be restricted to investigating only totally distinguishable industries or companies which have no relation whatsoever to any adjudicative respondent.[12] Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. F.T.C., 359 F.2d 487 (8th Cir. 1966).

VII. CONCLUSION

[33] No injunctive relief is proper at this time. Cf. F.T.C. v. Waltham Watch Co., 169 F.Supp. 614 (S.D.N.Y.1959). On the basis of principles established by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, Genuine Parts Co. v. F.T.C., supra, 445 F.2d 1382, and other Courts of Appeals, e.g., United States v. Litton Industries, Inc., supra, 462 F.2d 14, plaintiff is not likely to prevail on the merits of this case. Plaintiff will not now suffer irreparable harm because it is under no

[12] The investigative authority of the FTC and, concomitantly, the power of Congress to order such investigations, would be severely reduced if plaintiff's argument were to be enforced to its logical conclusion. Plaintiff's suggested interpretation of administrative procedure would be that no company could be investigated if it possessed any information which could possibly have relevance to activities of any company currently involved in an adjudication. Joint venturers would conceivably fall within plaintiff's protected group, as would suppliers, manufacturers, and customers of plaintiff, since all of these entities on the vertical scale of those businesses in the natural gas industry may possess business records revealing information about plaintiff.

Also, an agency such as the FTC would be precluded from conducting any investigation which arguably overlapped with an already pending adjudicative proceeding, since a request for information of appropriate breadth during the investigation would overlap areas of information pertinent to the adjudication. Such a result cannot have been contemplated by the Congress.

present duty to comply. There would be substantial potential harm to the agency defendants, to the Congressional mandate at issue, and to the public interest if plaintiff's requested injunction were issued at this time. The motion for preliminary injunction is therefore denied. The motion for declaratory relief is also denied.

ON MOTION FOR INJUNCTION PENDING APPEAL

Plaintiff's Motion for Injunction Pending Appeal is denied. On July 3, 1975, this Court entered an order denying plaintiff's motions for injunctive and declaratory relief. Since plaintiff filed suit only to seek to enjoin attempts at compliance with investigative subpoenas duces tecum, the Court also entered [17] a final judgment on that date. Plaintiff has now moved, pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 62(c), to enjoin enforcement of this Court's order and final judgment pending appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. On the record now before this Court, and in view of standards which have been enunciated by the Court of Appeals to be applied to motions of this type, Belcher v. Birmingham Trust National Bank, 395 F.2d 685 (5th Cir. 1968), the Court concludes that no injunction pending appeal should issue.

[34] As the Court of Appeals and the commentators have noted, the governing considerations in a motion filed pursuant to Rule 62(c) are: (1) that the applicant make a strong showing that it is likely to succeed on the merits of the appeal; (2) that the applicant establish that unless a stay is granted it will suffer irreparable injury; (3) that no substantial harm will come to other interested parties; and (4) that a stay would do no harm to the public interest. 11 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 2904 at 316 (1973); Belcher v. Birmingham Trust National Bank, supra; Blackshear Residents Organization v. Romney, 472 F.2d 1197 (5th Cir. 1973).

The Court of Appeals in the Belcher case made clear that granting an injunction pending appeal is an extraordinary remedy. 395 F.2d 685. Such relief should be sparingly granted. F.M.C. v. New York Terminal Conference, 373 F.2d 424, 426 (2d Cir. 1967).

[35] The equities preponderate strongly against the applicant in the instant motion. The Court made this identical determination on July 3 in deciding whether a requested injunction should issue at that time. Since the request for injunction at this time arguably interjects additional considerations, including maintenance of the status quo, the Court re-evaluates the four criteria in this context. In this case, the Court was confronted with a complaint against the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") and its members, and against three corporations which are joint venturers with plaintiff in "CAGC", a joint venture organized for the purpose of conducting offshore explorations for natural gas. The Court held: (1) that there was no justiciable case or controversy between plaintiff and the three corporate defendants; (2) that the Court could not find a justiciable case or controversy between plaintiff and the remaining defendants because of problems with standing and ripeness, but that out of an abundance of caution in view of Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 18 L.Ed.2d 681 (1967), the Court, for purposes of resolving whether an injunction should issue, would reach the merits of a limited question framed on page 16 of its opinion of July 3, see Memorandum and Opinion of the Court (July 3, 1975), at 14, supra; and (3) that an evaluation of this limited inquiry caused the Court to conclude that plaintiff was not entitled to injunctive or declaratory relief.

The Court determined at that time, and continues to hold, that plaintiff is not likely to prevail on the merits, that substantial harm will be worked upon defendants and upon the public interest if an injunction were to be issued, and that no irreparable injury will be worked upon plaintiff. Viewing such findings against the backdrop of the considerations prompted by the instant motion, this Court holds that the decision rendered in the July 3 opinion is to continue in full force and effect.

The Court further concludes that no injunction is necessary to preserve the status quo. The Court outlined in detail the judicial and administrative remedies available to plaintiff in contesting the agency action challenged in the instant case, the issuance of an investigative subpoena duces tecum during the pen[18]dency of an adjudicative proceeding in which an investigatee was involved. See 16 C.F.R. §§ 3.31-3.39; 15 U.S.C. § 49. Indeed, the availability of these remedies caused the Court to have serious reservations about the issues of standing to sue and ripeness for adjudication. Such remedies continue to operate with full force in the context of protecting those constitutional and procedural rights to which plaintiff is entitled as an adjudicative respondent. Plaintiff is under no present duty to comply with the instant subpoenas; if a court of the United States, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49, determines that plaintiff should comply, plaintiff will still have the opportunity to contest any pretrial improprieties in the conduct of discovery in the adjudicative proceeding before the Administrative Law Judge presiding over that proceeding. Similarly, even if this Court is found to have decided incorrectly the issue of justiciable case or controversy between plaintiff and the three corporate defendants, the fact of compliance by those three corporations will still not work to prejudice plaintiff. The presence of administrative protections will continue to operate and be at plaintiff's disposal if agency improprieties surface or are even suspected.

The Court emphasized in its opinion of July 3, and it reiterates here, the hypothetical nature of the thesis upon which plaintiff bases its complaint and its request for an injunction pending appeal. Because such a rationale does not persuade this Court that plaintiff is entitled to injunctive relief at this stage, and because maintenance of the status quo is not a compelling consideration in this case as it has been in others, cf. J. Weingarten, Inc. v. Potter, 233 F.Supp. 833 (S.D.Tex.1964), the Court concludes that plaintiff's motion should be, and it hereby is, denied. See Bayless v. Martine, 430 F.2d 873, 879 (5th Cir. 1970); cf. Crown Zellerbach Corp. v. F.T.C., 156 F.2d 927 (9th Cir. 1946).

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Plaintiff's Motion for Injunction Pending Appeal is denied. On July 3, 1975, this Court entered an order denying plaintiff's motions for injunctive and declaratory relief. Since plaintiff filed suit only to seek to enjoin attempts at compliance with investigative subpoenas duces tecum, the Court also entered a final judgment on that date. Plaintiff has now moved, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 62(c), to enjoin enforcement of this Court's order and final judgment pending appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. On the record now before this Court, and in view of standards which have been enunciated by the Court of Appeals to be applied to motions of this type, Belcher v.

* Not otherwise reported. For July 3, 1975 case, see p. 1385 herein. Appeal filed July 8, 1975 by plaintiff in Court of Appeals, Fifth Cir.; denied July 18, 1975.

Birmingham Trust National Bank, 395 F.2d 685 (5th Cir. 1968), the Court concludes that no injunction pending appeal should issue.

As the Court of Appeals and the commentators have noted, the governing considerations in a motion filed pursuant to Rule 62(c) are: (1) that the applicant make a strong showing that it is likely to succeed on the merits of the appeal; (2) that the applicant establish that unless a stay is granted it will suffer irreparable injury; (3) that no substantial harm will come to other interested parties; and (4) that a stay would do no harm to the public interest. 11 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 2904 at 316 (1973); Belcher v. Birmingham Trust National Bank, supra; Blackshear Residents Organization v. Romney, 472 F.2d 1197 (5th Cir. 1973).

The Court of Appeals in the Belcher case made clear that granting an injunction pending appeal is an extraordinary remedy. 395 F.2d 685. Such relief should be sparingly granted. F.M.C. v. New York Terminal Conference, 373 F.2d 424, 426 (2d Cir. 1967).

The equities preponderate strongly against the applicant in the instant motion. The Court made this identical determination on July 3 in deciding whether a requested injunction should issue at that time. Since the request for injunction at this time arguably interjects additional considerations, including maintenance of the status quo, the Court re-evaluates the four criteria in this context. In this case, the Court was confronted with a complaint against the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") and its members, and against three corporations which are joint venturers with plaintiff in "CAGC", a joint venture organized for the purpose of conducting offshore explorations for natural gas. The Court determined at that time, and continues to hold, that plaintiff is not likely to prevail on the merits, that substantial harm will be worked upon defendants and upon the public interest if an injunction were to be issued, and that no irreparable injury will be worked upon plaintiff. Viewing such findings against the backdrop of the considerations prompted by the instant motion, this Court holds that the decision rendered in the July 3 opinion is to continue in full force and effect.

The Court further concludes that no injunction is necessary to preserve the status quo. The Court outlined in detail the judicial and administrative remedies available to plaintiff in contesting the agency action challenged in the instant case, the issuance of an investigative subpoena duces tecum during the pendency of an adjudicative proceeding in which an investigatee was involved. See 16 C.F.R. §§ 3.31-3.39; 15 U.S.C. § 49. Indeed, the availability of these remedies caused the Court to have serious reservations about the issues of standing to sue and ripeness for adjudication. ORDER

Upon consideration of the motion of the Federal Trade Commission for reconsideration of this Court's Order dated July 1, 1975, and memorandum in support of said motion, and upon consideration of all papers in opposition to or in reply to said motion, it is now by the Court on this 28th day of July, 1975,

Ordered, that the motion of the Federal Trade Commission be, and the same is, hereby granted, and it is Further Ordered, that this Court's Order of July 1, 1975, is hereby modified by deleting therefrom the first paragraph at page 2 of said Order and inserting in lieu of said paragraph the following paragraph:

> Further Ordered, that the Commission shall file within 60 days of this date a report on the status of its preparation of an environmental impact statement, and shall file further status reports every 60 days thereafter until completion of the Commission's consideration of the environmental impact statement and reconsideration of the octane posting rule, and the Commission shall, not later than 10 days after completion of the Commission's reconsideration of its octane posting rule supplement the record previously filed in this action to reflect the promulgation of an environmental impact statement and the Commission's reconsideration of its Rule.

(United States Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit, August 8, 1975)

1. GRANT OR DENIAL OF PETITION FOR ENFORCEMENT OF SUBPOENA BY DISTRICT COURT ORDER IS A FINAL, APPEALABLE DECISION.

   District court order granting or denying petition of agency for enforcement of an administrative subpoena is final, appealable decision.

2. INDICATIONS BY DISTRICT COURT OF ITS WILLINGNESS TO RECONSIDER CERTAIN ASPECTS OF ORDER UPON ADEQUATE SHOWING DID NOT DEPRIVE ORDER OF ITS FINAL, APPEALABLE CHARACTER.

   Mere fact that district court indicated that it might be persuaded to reconsider certain aspects of order for enforcement of administrative subpoena issued by Federal Trade Commission if Commission was able to make adequate showing after examining documents to be produced did not deprive order of its final, appealable character.

3. FOR APPEALABILITY PURPOSES, FINAL DECISION IS NOT NECESSARILY LAST ORDER POSSIBLE.

   Final decision, for purposes of appealability, is not necessarily the last order possible to be made in the case.

4. ORDER APPEARING TO BE FINAL RESOLUTION OF CONTROVERSY, GIVEN PRACTICAL VS. TECHNICAL CONSTRUCTION, WAS APPEALABLE.

* Reported in 517 F.2d 137 (1975). For district court judgment, see page 905 herein. Petition for rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc filed by the Commission in D.C. Cir. October 3, 1975, and granted on February 6, 1976, with the August 8, 1975, opinion and judgment being vacated.

Federal Trade Commission was entitled to appeal order which, given practical rather than technical construction, [138] showed every sign of being final resolution of its controversy with producers.

5. DOCTRINE OF COLLATERAL ESTROPPEL PRECLUDES RELITIGATION BY F.T.C. WHERE F.T.C. KNEW OF F.P.C. ADJUDICATORY PROCEEDING AND COULD HAVE INTERVENED.

Where, at time Federal Trade Commission initiated its own proceeding to investigate reporting of natural gas reserves, it knew of Federal Power Commission's adjudicatory proceeding and could have intervened, and where Power Commission had particular expertise on the factual issue involved, i.e., accuracy of industry's figures on proved natural gas reserves, and where proceeding before Power Commission was conducted in adversarial environment wherein third parties with adverse economic interests participated at all stages, doctrine of collateral estoppel was applicable to preclude relitigation by Trade Commission.

6. DISTRICT COURT'S DECISION COULD ONLY BE REVERSED IF CLEARLY ERRONEOUS.

District court's determination of essentially factual issue whether Federal Power Commission actually determined an issue which Federal Trade Commission sought to relitigate could be reversed only if clearly erroneous.

7. DETERMINATION OF VIOLATIONS OF ANTITRUST LAWS OR F.T.C. ACT IS WITHIN F.T.C.'S JURISDICTION.

Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction to determine whether the antitrust laws or Federal Trade Commission Act has been violated.

8. DISTRICT COURT LIMITATION ON PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS BALANCED INVESTIGATORY NEEDS OF F.T.C. AND PRODUCERS' CLAIMS ARISING OUT OF F.P.C.'S PRIOR INVESTIGATIONS.

Where district court on contention of collateral estoppel reasonably concluded (1) that Federal Trade Commission desired all natural gas reserve data in possession of producers, etc., in order to recompute independently certain reserves, and (2) that Federal Power Commission on basis of contested adversary hearing had found that industry's figures were accurate, court by limiting production of documents to those documents concerning or underlying proof of natural gas reserve estimates reasonably balanced investigatory needs of Trade Commission and producers' claims arising out of prior Power Commission's investigations.

9. JUDICIAL FUNCTION, IN ENFORCEMENT PROCEEDINGS, IS NEITHER MINISTERIAL NOR MINOR.

Judicial function in determining, in an enforcement proceeding, whether documents sought by an administrative subpoena are relative to agency's inquiry is to be considered neither minor nor ministerial.

10. UNLESS CLEARLY ERRONEOUS, COURT OF APPEALS MUST DEFER TO DISTRICT COURT'S FINDINGS.

Question whether documents sought by administrative subpoena are relevant to agency's inquiry is essentially factual in nature, and Court of Appeals must defer to district court's finding unless it is clearly erroneous.

11. DISTRICT COURT'S FINDING THAT F.T.C.'S REQUEST FOR NATURAL GAS PRODUCERS' BID FILES WAS IRRELEVANT TO INQUIRY INTO REPORTING OF PROVED NATURAL GAS RESERVES WAS PROPER.

In enforcement proceeding, district court properly found that natural gas producers' bid files, containing information based upon limited, geophysical information and usually not upon actual exploration, were not relevant to Federal Trade Commission's inquiry into the reporting of proved natural gas reserves in certain area.

12. SUBPOENAS FOUND UNDULY BURDENSOME MAY BE LIMITED BY ENFORCING COURT; SUCH RULING CAN ONLY BE OVERTURNED ON APPEAL FOR ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Enforcing court may limit, through modification or partial enforcement, subpoenas which it finds to be unduly burdensome; such modification or partial enforcement is exercise of district court's sound discretion and will only be overturned on appeal for abuse of discretion.

13. DISTRICT COURT ABUSED ITS DISCRETION IN LIMITING F.T.C.'S INVESTIGATION TO YEARS 1969, 1970, AND 1971 WHERE F.T.C. APPARENTLY NEEDED DATA FOR PREVIOUS PERIOD TO MAKE COMPARISON.

[139] In enforcement proceeding, district court had discretion to limit production of documents sought in Federal Trade Commission's proceeding to investigate reporting of proved natural gas reserves, to a random sampling of fields, but limitation to years 1969, 1970 and 1971 was abuse of discretion where the Commission apparently needed data for period of time preceding reported drop in reserves, to make comparison.

14. DISTRICT COURT DID NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION IN PLACING CERTAIN CONDITIONS UPON DISCLOSURE OF CONCEDEDLY CONFIDENTIAL DOCUMENTS.

In requiring production of documents which were concededly of confidential nature, district court did not abuse its discretion in attaching certain conditions upon disclosure as against contention of Federal Trade Commission that Federal Trade Commission Act and Commission's rules of practice provided adequate protection.

15. PROVIDING OPTION OF PERMITTING PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION AT PLACE OF STORAGE WAS NOT AN ABUSE OF COURT'S DISCRETION.

In requiring production of documents for use by Federal Trade Commission, district court did not abuse discretion in providing option of permitting production of documents for inspection where they were stored.

16. SPECIFICATIONS OF SUBPOENA RELEVANT TO MEMBERS OF TRADE ASSOCIATION WAS PROPERLY LIMITED WHERE ONE PRODUCER WAS NOT A MEMBER OF THE SUBJECT TRADE ASSOCIATION.

In enforcement proceeding, scope of subpoena duces tecum was properly limited as against one of several natural gas producers where, because such producer was not member of producers' trade association, specifications relating to reporting and participating in association were not relevant to such producer.

17. APPELLATE TRIBUNALS SHOULD BE WARY OF SECOND-GUESSING WHERE QUESTIONS OF SUBPOENA RELEVANCE AND BURDENSOMENESS ARE PECULIARLY WITHIN KEN OF TRIAL COURT.

Petition for enforcement of an administrative subpoena duces tecum must be judged by district court on case-by-case basis, and because questions of relevance and burdensomeness are peculiarly within ken of trial court, appellate tribunals should be wary of second-guessing.

On appeal from partial enforcement order of U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, page 905 herein, Court of Appeals held that the district court properly refused to enforce portions of subpoenas not relevant to F.T.C. investigation; limited production of documents properly, but abused its discretion in limiting F.T.C. to discovery of years 1969, 1970, and 1971; and that district court did not abuse its discretion in attaching conditions to production of documents in effort to protect confidentiality.

[140] This litigation is an outgrowth of a Federal Trade Commission (FTC) investigation into the reporting of natural gas reserves by natural gas producers in Southern Louisiana.[1] Specifically, we have before us seven consolidated appeals by the FTC from orders entered by the District Court granting enforcement in part and denying enforcement in part of subpoenas duces tecum issued by the Commission to appellees, seven large natural gas producers, in connection with its investigation. The subpoena issued to each of the appellees and the orders issued by the District Court are reproduced as appendices to this opinion.

[1] Southern Louisiana as used throughout this opinion includes the offshore producing area (seaward from the Louisiana coastline) and that portion of Louisiana defined as the "South Louisiana District." Joint Brief for Appellees Texaco, Inc., Standard Oil Co. (Indiana), Shell Oil Co., and Exxon Corp. [hereinafter Common Counsel Brief], p. 3 n. 4. Southern Louisiana is recognized as the most important gas-producing area in the country. Southern Louisiana Area Rate Cases, 428 F.2d 407, 418 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 950, 91 S.Ct. 243, 27 L.Ed.2d 257 (1970).

I. The Facts and the Issues

The American Gas Association (AGA) is a trade association of producers, distributors, and marketers of natural gas. Through its Committee on Natural Gas Reserves, the AGA has since 1946 been providing the industry, the Government, and the general public with annual estimates of the proved natural gas and natural gas liquid reserves of the United States.[2] For the purposes of gathering reserve data, the nation is divided into ten geographical districts. A member of the Committee on Natural Gas Reserves is assigned to each district; the committee member in turn appoints a subcommittee to assist him in gathering reserve data within the district. The FTC's investigation focuses on the activities of the South Louisiana subcommittee.

In May 1969 when the AGA reported its 1968 figures, they indicated a decline in proved reserves nationally, the first such decline ever reported. Before the year was out, this and other information reaching the Federal Power Commission prompted a reopening of its just-concluded Southern Louisiana Area Rate Pro[141]ceeding. Those proceedings will be discussed in more detail below. The May 1970 report for 1969 showed even further declines for total United States reserves and total Southern Louisiana reserves.

In late 1970 the Federal Trade Commission began an investigation into the reporting of proved natural gas reserves in Southern Louisiana. In June 1971 the investigation took on more formal status when the Trade Commission issued a resolution authorizing the use of compulsory process in furtherance of a nonpublic investigation. In that resolution the nature and scope of the investigation was defined as follows: The purpose of the authorized investigation is to develop facts relating to the acts and practices of . . . [certain named corporations] to determine whether said corporations, and other persons and corporations, individually or in concert are engaged in conduct in the reporting of natural gas reserves for Southern Louisiana which violates Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, or are engaged in conduct or activities relating to the exploration and development, production, or marketing of natural gas, petroleum, and petroleum products, and other fossil fuels in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.[3]

[2] Throughout this opinion we will use the term "proved reserves." The following is the definition of proved reserves adopted by the AGA in its annual publication, "Reserves of Crude Oil, Natural Gas Liquids, and Natural Gas in the United States and Canada and United States Productive Capacity," Volume 28, June 1974. The first two paragraphs of the following definition appear on page 103 of this publication, the third paragraph is derived from page 99 and the last paragraph is derived from pages 96 and 97:

Proved Reserves are the estimated quantity of natural gas which analysis of geologic and engineering data demonstrate with reasonable certainty to be recoverable in the future from known oil and gas reservoirs under existing economic and operating conditions. Reservoirs are considered proved that have demonstrated the ability to produce by either actual production or conclusive formation test.

The area of a reservoir considered proved is that portion delineated by drilling and defined by gas-oil, gas-water contacts or limited by the structural deformation or lenticularity of the reservoir. In the absence of fluid contacts, the lowest known structural occurrency of hydrocarbons controls the proved limits of the reservoir. The proved area of a reservoir may also include the adjoining portions not delineated by drilling but which can be evaluated as economically productive on the basis of geological and engineering data available at the time the estimate is made. Therefore, the reserves reported should include total proved reserves which may be in either the drilled or the undrilled portions of the field or reservoir.

Natural gas reserves take into account the shrinkage of the reservoir gas volume resulting from the removal of the liquefiable portions of the hydrocarbon gases and the reduction of volume due to the exclusion of non-hydrocarbon gases where they occur in sufficient quantity to render the gas unmarketable.

The proved reserves estimated are to include all gas reserves regardless of size, availability of market, ultimate disposition or use.

From the beginning of its investigation the AGA had been cooperating with the Trade Commission on a voluntary basis. As a result the Commission was able to obtain the field-by-field estimates of proved reserves made by each Southern Louisiana subcommittee member for the years 1966 through 1970.[4] The Commission had also obtained reserve information from Form 15 reports filed with the Federal Power Commission. These reports are filed by interstate natural gas pipelines and list recoverable, saleable gas reserves committed to, collected by, or held by reporting pipelines.

Approximately one year after beginning its investigation, on 24 November 1971, the Commission's staff issued identical administrative subpoenas duces tecum to eleven natural gas producers. All eleven producers moved to quash the subpoenas. The motions to quash or limit were denied by the Commission on 27 June 1972.[5] Following the Commission's denial, the Trade Commission's staff, after negotiations with the gas producers, offered additional safeguards for the confidentiality of information to be supplied. As a result two producers agreed to comply fully with the subpoenas and [142] one agreed to comply in part. (Soon after petitions for enforcement were filed in the District Court, one more firm agreed to comply with the subpoena.)

Petitions for enforcement of the remaining subpoenas were filed in the District Court on 4 June 1973. On 30 July 1973 the District Court held a hearing on preliminary motions and also heard a preliminary presentation of the issues posed by the case. Subsequently evidentiary materials and briefs were filed by all parties. A second hearing was held on 13 December 1973 at which time the issues were fully argued to the court over a period of several hours.

[3] Appendix [hereinafter App.] III 497a.

[4] These statistics were made available to the FTC subject to an agreement restricting access to and disclosure of the data. The agreement provided, inter alia, that:

(2) Representatives of your Bureau [i. e., the Commission's Bureau of Competition] will make use of such reports only in connection with its current investigation into the reporting of natural gas reserves by the American Gas Association, and for the purpose of verification of natural gas reserves estimates reported by the A.G.A. Committee on Natural Gas Reserves; and shall not release, disclose, disseminate or publicize in any manner, to any person, any statistic or data contained in such reports, unless otherwise available in published records or documents, without twenty days prior notice, and opportunity to seek appropriate legal protection or relief, to A.G.A. and to each member of the South Louisiana Subcommittee whose statistics are to be disclosed by the Commission. Supplemental Reply Brief, pp. 3-4. The agreement also provided that custody of the documents be maintained by a neutral third party, Price Waterhouse & Co.

The producers have alleged in supplemental filings before this court that the FTC breached this agreement by releasing to a Congressman certain staff and working papers containing excerpts from the AGA reserve statistics after less than 72 hours' notice. In a reply the Commission conceded that it had released the information to the Congressman, who by a phone call "required that the documents be immediately released" to him. The Commission argues, however, that the above paragraph was intended to prohibit disclosure of the data to the public or to competitors, and was not meant to cover the case where a Member of Congress or Congressional committee might immediately require use of the data. In addition, the Trade Commission argues that it lacks the statutory power to keep the data confidential to begin with.

[5] App. III 498a-525a.

The two orders here under review were filed on 22 March 1974. One order covered the subpoenas issued to appellees Texaco, Inc., Standard Oil Co. (Indiana), Shell Oil Co., Exxon Corp., Standard Oil Co. of California, and Mobil Oil Corp. The other order related to the subpoena issued to the Superior Oil Co., Inc. (hereinafter Superior). The former order enforced specifications A, B, C, D, E, and F in full; however, it only granted partial enforcement of the remaining specifications, G through L.

The District Court found the subpoenas to be overly broad and unduly burdensome because they sought to duplicate activities of the Federal Power Commission which had already resulted in a finding that AGA proved reserve estimates were valid and accurate. As a result, specifications G through L were modified so that raw field data, bid calculation data, and bid calculation files need not be produced. However, all documents containing or underlying proved reserve estimates in the offshore Southern Louisiana area are to be produced.

The court, in an attempt to make the subpoenas less burdensome, limited production of these documents to a random sample of 100 out of approximately 225 relevant fields and to the years 1969, 1970, and 1971. Specifications J, K, and L were similarly modified so that only documents relating to proved natural gas reserve estimates in the offshore Southern Louisiana area need be submitted. However, the court enforced the subpoena as regards any documents prepared between 1966 and 1971, inclusive, "which were exchanged between or among, or constitute, contain or refer to any agreement, arrangement or communication between or among, respondents or others, including the American Gas Association." The subpoenas were also modified so that additional protections were afforded to confidential information. In addition, producers were accorded the option of producing records for inspection where they were stored.

Superior was in a different position from the other six producers. Superior had never been a member of the AGA nor had it ever furnished proved reserve figures to the AGA. Superior's employees also had not participated in the work of AGA's committees or subcommittees. As a result, the District Court enforced specifications A through F and K through L in full and denied enforcement of specifications G, H, I, and J. Identical confidentiality protections were afforded Superior.

Because the producers have not cross-appealed, the issues before us relate solely to the limiting modifications made by the District Court. For the purposes of this opinion, we have formulated those issues as follows:

(1) Was the District Court in error in refusing to enforce those portions of the subpoenas that called for documents which did not relate to estimates of proved reserves?

(2) Did the District Court abuse its discretion in limiting production of documents to a random sample of fields and to the years 1969, 1970, and 1971?

(3) Did the District Court abuse its discretion in attaching conditions to disclosure to insure confidentiality and in permitting documents to be produced for inspection at their situs?

(4) Was the District Court in error in affording Superior Oil differing treatment?

[143] [1-4] We proceed now to deal with these issues.[6]

II. Documents Which Did Not Relate to Proved Reserves

A. The Arguments

The producers have never quarreled with the power or the right of the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the natural gas industry to uncover violations of the antitrust laws or unfair trade practices. However, they argue that there can be no possible reason for wanting documents that do not relate to proved reserve estimates because it is only proved reserve estimates that are taken into account by the Federal Power Commission in the setting of area rate ceilings. In addition, they argue that the Federal Power Commission, the only agency possessing the requisite expertise, has determined that AGA proved reserve data is accurate. Therefore, the FTC is collaterally estopped from relitigating the issue.

The Trade Commission, on the other hand, points out that there is no provision in the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTCA) excepting gas producers from the coverage of the Act, as there is for banks and certain common carriers, and that therefore jurisdiction to investigate exists. They argue that such jurisdiction is broad, "reaching not only existing violations of . . . [the Sherman and Clayton Acts], but trade practices which conflict with their basic policies."[7] The Trade Commission goes on to argue that, as a factual matter, its investigation does not duplicate studies made by the Federal Power Commission and that, even if it did, collateral estoppel would be inapplicable because its purpose in determining the accuracy of reserve data is different from the Power Commission's purpose in determining accuracy.[8] [6] Standard Oil Co. of California argues that the six producers order is not a final decision within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1291 and therefore is not appealable. We disagree. It is well established that an order of a District Court granting or denying a petition of an agency for enforcement of an administrative subpoena is a final decision and hence appealable. Ellis v. ICC, 237 U.S. 434, 442, 35 S.Ct. 645, 59 L.Ed. 1036 (1915); Int'l Brotherhood of Electrical Workers v. EEOC, 398 F.2d 248, 251 (3rd Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1021, 89 S.Ct. 628, 21 L.Ed. 565 (1969); Martin v. Chandis Securities Co., 128 F.2d 731, 734 (9th Cir. 1942). The mere fact the District Court indicated that it might be persuaded to reconsider certain aspects of the order if the Commission were able to make an adequate showing after examining the documents to be produced does not deny the order of its final character. A final decision is not necessarily "the last order possible to be made in a case. . . ." Gillespie v. United States Steel Corp., 379 U.S. 148, 152, 85 S.Ct. 308, 311, 13 L.Ed.2d 199 (1964). A "practical rather than a technical construction" of the District Court's order, Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 546, 69 S.Ct. 1221, 1226, 93 L.Ed. 1528 (1949), indicates that the Trade Commission should be entitled to appeal an order which shows every sign of being a final resolution of its controversy with the six producers.

[144] Although the producers may be correct in arguing that data relating to any reserves other than proved reserves would be irrelevant, our reading of the transcript of the 10 December 1973 hearing indicates to us that the District Court had not reached the issue of relevance in regard to the totality of all documents subpoenaed. The court believed that the Trade Commission had subpoenaed all reserve records in order to determine independently the total gas reserves of the area. Since the Power Commission had already determined that AGA figures were accurate, the court was of the view that the Trade Commission could not force the producers to relitigate the matter and that, in any event, it would be unduly burdensome to permit yet another plenary investigation (for the third time in two years) of natural gas reserves.

In order to fully understand the District Court's ruling on this aspect of the case, it is necessary for us to discuss the previously alluded to Power Commission investigations.

B. The Federal Power Commission Investigations

Although the Federal Power Commission (FPC) began area rate proceedings in 1961 for the Southern Louisiana area, it was not until 1968 that the Commission rendered a final decision, which in turn was modified in early 1969. Even before oral argument could be heard before the Fifth Circuit on petitions for review sought by producers, pipeline companies, and consumers, the FPC had instituted new proceedings (So La II) "to reconsider all major actions it had taken" in the prior proceeding.[9] As the FPC stated in its order instituting So La II, Phase I of its new proceeding "should include evidence with respect to the adequacy of gas supply and adequacy of service to consumers, the demand for gas, the gas shortage, if any, the effect of price on gas supply and demand, and other relevant economic evidence . . . ."[10]

[7] Appellant's Brief, pp. 17-18.

[8] We are fully cognizant of section 15(b) of the Federal Energy Administration Act of 1974, P.L. 93-275, 88 Stat. 96, 109 (7 May 1974), which provides:

"(b) Not later than one year after the effective date of this act, the Administrator shall submit a report to the President and Congress which will provide a complete and independent analysis of actual oil and gas reserves and resources in the United States and its Outer Continental Shelf, as well as of the existing productive capacity and the extent to which such capacity could be increased for crude oil and each major petroleum product each year for the next ten years through full utilization of available technology and capacity. The report shall also contain the Administration's recommendations for improving the utilization and effectiveness of Federal energy data and its manner of collection. The data collection and analysis portion of this report shall be prepared by the Federal Trade Commission for the Administration. Unless specifically prohibited by law, all Federal agencies shall make available estimates, statistics, data and other information in their files which, in the judgment of the Commission or Administration, are necessary for the purposes of this subsection." The FTC has never argued that this statute provides independent justification for their subpoenas, since, of course, the subpoenas were issued three years before the statute was [144] enacted. The Commission has, however, used the statute in its briefs as evidence of the fact that "Congress . . . considers the Federal Trade Commission to have a major role in determining the extent of natural gas reserves." Appellant's Brief, p. 22.

In furtherance of its duties under section 15(b), the Trade Commission has prepared yet another questionnaire concerning proved reserves and has sent it to "60 selected natural gas producers." - Letter of 28 April 1975 from Commission to the court. The Commission's staff intends to use the responses along with information gathered by the Federal Power Commission and other government agencies in preparing its natural gas study and in aiding the Federal Energy Administrator in the preparation of its energy report. Ibid.

The FPC was concerned in So La II with complaints that adequate supplies of natural gas were not being produced and would not be produced under the recently ordered area rate ceilings. More important for present purposes, the FPC during So La II was presented with the argument by Municipal Distributors Group (MDG), an intervenor which represented the interests of municipal and other publicly owned gas distribution systems, that the supply shortage was more apparent than real. It was argued that "the sharp decline in the supply picture in 1968-69 is revealed by the above record evidence to be caused . . . largely by revisions in the estimates" of proved reserves reported by the American Gas Association (AGA).[11] Such a contention went to the heart of the Power Commission investigation. If it were true that the decline in reserves was a matter of definition and not of economics, the concern of the FPC that new area rates might be required to encourage production would be obviated.

In its final opinion in So La II the FPC discussed testimony which was used by MDG to impeach AGA data. The testimony outlined several methods by [145] which producers could withhold reserves from the AGA. Discussed also were MDG's arguments relating to discrepancies between figures gathered by the FPC and those submitted by the AGA. The FPC also referred in some detail to the testimony and exhibits supporting the reliability of AGA data. As a result, it reached the following conclusions:

> AGA and Form 15 data show similar trends of reserves and reserve-to-production (R/P) ratios. AGA data indicates a steady decline in the national R/P ratio from 19 in 1963 to 13 in 1969. Form 15 data indicates a similar decline in the national R/P ratio from 20 in 1963 to 14 in 1969. The American Gas Association reserve data is not impeached, in our opinion, in this discrepancy.[12]

> the purposes used herein. Accordingly, and because petitioner has not raised any new evidence, we deny the petition to reopen.[13]

In other words, while AGA data started with 19 years of reserves and the Form 15 data started with 20 in 1963, by 1969 each calculation had dropped 6 years off its proved reserve figure, so the two calculations were comparable. Thus, AGA data was shown to be reliable.

The issue was raised again on review before the Fifth Circuit and received the following extensive rebuttal in a footnote:

> [13] As might be expected, there is some controversy over this. Standing virtually alone against the National (and record) judgment of a near energy calamity, the American Public Gas Association (APGA) contends that the current critical shortage of natural gas is but a pretextual "cry of wolf" calculated to mislead FPC into establishing artificially high rates in the producers' behalf. APGA would have us believe that the energy crisis is a mirage—indeed, a hoax! APGA claims that "there appear to be adequate supplies of gas in the domestic United States to satisfy the projected demands of U. S. consumers well into the 21st Century." APGA Supp. Brf. at 5 n. 9. But to talk of "Supplies" of gas is a misleading oversimplification. Obviously, the gas is not presently available. At most, if there is appropriate exploration, the demonstrable reserves may be exploited to meet the needs. Given a system which depends on private stewardship and marshalling of natural resources, there is a supply shortage if the producers do not produce. FPC has the statutory duty, not only to guard the consumers against super-profits reaped from artificially inflated rates, but also to protect consumer interests by making sure that the rate schedule is high enough to elicit an adequate supply. It is a delicate balancing test. FPC must fix its course to attain the utopian "optimum" rate schedule. Given the current shortage of available supply FPC must swing the pendulum towards the incentive, supply-eliciting side of rates. And so it has done.[14]

In addition to the examination undertaken in relation to the So La II proceedings, the Power Commission undertook in early 1971, at the direction of Congress, a National Gas Survey, a portion of which was a National Gas Reserves Survey (NGRS). NGRS was a completely independent survey of reserves and did not rely on AGA figures at any point. However, in the Final Staff Report of the NGRS (May 1973) a comparison was made with AGA figures:

> The NGRS estimate is lower than the estimate by A.G.A.; however, the [146] difference is less than 10 percent. The difference of 23.5 Tcf between the estimate of the non-associated and associated gas reserves for the 6,358 entries in the reported fields category (a) is the primary difference between the total estimates. The gas reserves in the "A.G.A. omitted fields" are a relatively insignificant part in the total NGRS estimate, and it seems evident that the 62 entries in the "omitted" category (b) are small fields. The two dissolved gas estimates differ by 1.7 Tcf or by about 5 percent.[15]

C. Collateral Estoppel

The Supreme Court and this court have clearly stated that an agency or a private party can be collaterally estopped in a later court proceeding if a relevant issue had already been resolved in a contested hearing before the agency.[16] The Supreme Court recently affirmed this principle:

[15] App. VI 1048a.

> Occasionally courts have used language to the effect that res judicata principles do not apply to administrative proceedings, but such language is certainly too broad. When an administrative agency is acting in a judicial capacity and resolves disputed issues of fact properly before it which the parties have had an adequate opportunity to litigate, the courts have not hesitated to apply res judicata to enforce repose. Sunshine Anthracite Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U.S. 381 [60 S.Ct. 907, 84 L.Ed. 1263]; Hanover Bank v. United States, 285 F.2d 455, 152 Ct.Cl. 391; Fairmont Aluminum Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, [4 Cir.], 222 F.2d 622; Seatrain Lines, Inc. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., [3 Cir.], 207 F.2d 255. See also Goldstein v. Doft, [D.C.N.Y.], 236 F.Supp. 730, aff'd [2 Cir.], 353 F.2d 484, cert. denied, 383 U.S. 960 [86 S.Ct. 1226, 16 L.Ed.2d 302], where collateral estoppel was applied to prevent relitigation of factual disputes resolved by an arbitrator.[17]

The Supreme Court has also held that collateral estoppel can be applied when the prior proceeding involved a different government agency because for collateral estoppel purposes, agencies of the same government are in privity with each other.

> Where the issues in separate suits are the same, the fact that the parties are not precisely identical is not necessarily fatal. As stated in Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co. v. Schendel, 270 U.S. 611, 620 [46 S.Ct. 420, 423, 424, 70 L.Ed. 757, 53 A.L.R. 1965], "Identity of parties is not a mere matter of form, but of substance. Parties nominally the same may be, in legal effect, different . . . and parties nominally different may be, in legal effect, the same." A judgment is res judicata in a second action upon the same claim between the same parties or those in privity with them. Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U.S. 351 [24 L.Ed. 195]. There is privity between officers of the same government so that a judgment in a suit between a party and a representative of the United States is res judicata in relitigation of the same issue between that [147] party and another officer of the government.[18]

Other Circuits have applied both these principles in appropriate cases. The Eighth Circuit has held that the FTC was collaterally estopped from claiming use of unfair methods of competition where the claim was based on factual issues resolved favorably for defendants in a prior proceeding instituted under the Food and Drug Act.[19] Reciprocally, the Seventh Circuit upheld the defense of collateral estoppel in a proceeding under the Food and Drug Act where a prior proceeding before the FTC held that defendant's labeling claims were not deceptive.[20]

[19] George H. Lee Co. v. FTC, 113 F.2d 583 (8th Cir. 1940).

[5] It is difficult for us to discern why the policies which support the application of res judicata or collateral estoppel between court adjudications involving different agencies would not always be equally applicable between administrative adjudications (especially in an era when administrative agencies are taking on duties which were once the preserve of the courts). However, there is no need to resolve this broader issue at this time because we hold that the application of collateral estoppel is clearly appropriate on the facts of this case. The Trade Commission knew of the Power Commission's adjudicatory proceeding in So La II when it initiated its own investigation and could have intervened in the proceeding. We also weigh heavily the fact that the Power Commission has particular expertise on the factual issue involved, the accuracy of industry figures on proved natural gas reserves. In addition, we find that an area rate proceeding, bringing together as it does sharply divergent economic interests in the same arena to do battle, provided an excellent context in which to resolve such an issue. The record clearly indicates that So La II was conducted in an adversarial environment wherein third parties with adverse economic interests participated at all stages of the proceedings.

[6] Having concluded that the application of collateral estoppel would be appropriate in this case, we turn now to the essentially factual question whether the Power Commission actually did determine an issue which the Trade Commission now seeks to relitigate. We note that on this matter our scope of review is narrower; we may reverse the District Court's determination only if it is clearly erroneous.[21] The Trade Commission in its briefs never directly argues that the Power Commission did not actually determine the accuracy of AGA figures. Rather, the Trade Commission contends that the Power Commission only determined that AGA figures were appropriate for its use in the determination of just and reasonable rates. The Trade Commission seeks to determine whether the producers are underreporting reserves and are thus violating the FTCA. We agree with appellees that the distinction is illusory. "[T]he FTC's very theory is that there is [20] United States v. Willard Tablet Co., 141 F.2d 141 (7th Cir. 1944).

[21] Rule 81(a)(3), F.R.Civ.P., provides that Federal Rules of Civil Procedure "apply to proceedings to compel the giving of testimony or production of documents in accordance with a subpoena issued by an officer or agency of the United States . . . ." We are thus bound by Rule 52(a), which states that "[f]indings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous . . . ."

Another requirement for the application of collateral estoppel is that "the issue in the prior action must have been necessary and essential to the resulting judgment." 1B Moore's Federal Practice ¶ 0.443[1] (1974). The FTC has not argued this issue in this appeal.

antitrust significance in reporting misleading reserves data because rates were affected."[22]

The District Court probed counsel for the Trade Commission on this point several times. At some points counsel argued that it wanted reserve estimates [148] because it was investigating "possible collusive conduct by the natural gas producers in the reporting of these reserves."[23] In this regard, the District Court explicitly stated in its order that the producers must produce all documents passing inter se or with the AGA.[24] At other points the argument appears to be what we set out above.

[7,8] There can be no question that the Trade Commission has jurisdiction to determine whether the antitrust laws or the FTCA has been violated. However, the District Court was entitled to conclude on the present record (1) that the Trade Commission desired all reserve data in the possession of appellees in order to recompute independently Southern Louisiana reserves, and (2) that the Power Commission, on the basis of a contested evidentiary hearing, had found that the industry's figures for Southern Louisiana reserves for the relevant years were accurate. Based on these findings, the District Court could reasonably have concluded that it would be unjust and unreasonable to require the production of every scrap of data which related to reserves of any kind. By limiting production to "documents containing or underlying proved natural gas reserve estimates," the court has drawn a reasonable balance between the investigatory needs of the Trade Commission and the producers' claims arising out of the prior Power Commission investigations.

D. The Bid Files

Among the documents which would be liable to disclosure under specifications G, H, and I would be the producers' bid files. The bid files include information which producers assemble in advance of an oil lease bid. The information is based upon limited geophysical information and usually not upon actual exploration. The producers consider the models they have developed for making lease bids the most valuable trade secrets they own, because of the large outlays which have gone into their development and the ease with which any producer could be outbid on leases if its competitors had access to the model.[25] The producers assert that data contained in a bid file would give a competitor easy access to their bid models and understandably strongly argue against disclosure.

[22] Common Counsel Brief, p. 25 n. 49.

[23] App. II 352a.

[24] See ¶ 3(b) of the six producers order. Reproduced as Appendix B.

The producers argue that the bid files are not relevant to any calculation of proved reserves, because the bids files only contain speculative estimates of producing capacity based on limited information. Once a producer obtains a lease and thus is able to drill exploratory wells, these bid estimates are no longer used by the company (except presumably to improve their bidding model or to analyze the bidding behavior of opponents). As a result, producers contend that the bid files could not be relevant to an investigation into conspiratorial and other practices to underreport proved reserves.

The Trade Commission on the other hand argues that "[t]he 'bid files' contain estimates of reserves, no matter how speculative or untested, and as such, are plainly relevant to the analysis of gas reserve reporting which is part of the Commission's investigation."[26] The Trade Commission adds in a footnote that the FTCA gives it the authority to report to Congress and that it therefore should be permitted to gather information for that purpose as well as for the more limited purpose of individual cease-and-desist orders.

[9,10] The Supreme Court in Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling[27] clearly indicated that the District Court must consider in an enforcement proceeding whether the documents sought [149] by an administrative subpoena are relevant to the agency's inquiry. The judicial function in this regard is to be considered "neither minor nor ministerial."[28] Because such a question is essentially factual in nature, we must defer to the District Court's finding unless we can conclude that its determination was clearly erroneous.

[11] The evidence and argument presented to the District Court permitted it to conclude that the producers' bid file contained highly speculative estimates, which would be rapidly superseded by much sounder estimates, once the winning bidder could begin drilling. After the first well is drilled on a lease, no company relies on bid file data, nor is such data ever reported to the AGA. Only data relevant to proved reserves is reported, and the essential ingredient in the definition of

"proved reserves" is that the data is obtained by drilling, by penetration of the formation.[29] The "proved reserves" definition is accepted by the industry, the Power Commission, and the Trade Commission here. Thus, even if the bid file data showed a gross disparity compared to the data on proved reserves submitted to the AGA, this would prove nothing except that the company's original bid estimates were sadly in error, for by definition the proved reserves data must be based on geological information obtained by drilling at a later time than when the bid data is assembled. The preliminary data has no relevance whatsoever in showing whether the preliminary estimates of reserves should later be moved to the strictly defined category of "proved reserves."[30]

The Trade Commission makes one final argument, that companies sometimes delay drilling in order not to acquire any proved reserve data which they would be obligated to turn in to the AGA. Aside from the dubious wisdom (and likelihood) of a petroleum company paying millions of dollars and then permitting the lease to go untested, the District Court judiciously added the following caveat:

> If you can later come back to me with a situation where a company has been awarded a bid on a property and has delayed an unreasonable time in drilling on it so they could come up with a proper estimate, then you may apply and I will consider giving you the bid file on that particular one.[31]

We therefore affirm the District Court's finding that the bid materials were not relevant[32] at the present time to the Trade Commission's inquiry and the related modification contained in paragraph 2(a) of its six producers' order.

III. Random Sampling and Time Limitations

The Trade Commission argues that the District Court should have required complete disclosure of all proved reserve data in the Southern Louisiana area back through 1962. Instead, the court ordered disclosure (1) of proved reserve data for a random sample of 100 fields out of the 220 in Southern Louisiana (2) for the years 1969, 1970, and 1971.

[12] It is well established that an enforcing court may limit through

[29] See note 2, supra.

[30] There is no consistently used or accepted definition for reserves other than "proved reserves." Various companies describe their data, at different stages, as "probable," "possible," "recoverable," and "ultimately recoverable."

[31] App. II 431a.

[32] We noted earlier that the District Court had not reached the issue of relevance with regard to the overall category of documents that do not relate to proved reserves. Page 144. Although logically the bid files fall within this category, throughout these proceedings they have been treated and discussed as if they were a discrete class of documents. The Record indicates that the District Court gave separate consideration to the bid files and ultimately based the relevant portions of the final order on a finding that the bid files lacked relevance. App. 431a.

modification or partial enforcement subpoenas [150] it finds to be unduly burdensome.[33] Such modification or partial enforcement is an exercise of the District Court's sound discretion and will only be overturned on appeal for abuse of discretion.[34]

With respect to the random sampling, the Trade Commission's position is that

> Such a limitation and sampling would make impossible any comparison of the total data supplied by producers who have fully complied with the subpoenas with the limited data which would be forthcoming from producers who supplied documents on only a random and numerically limited basis. Similarly the comparison with all the data submitted to the AGA for this region would be foreclosed.
> . . . Clearly the requirement that the Commission resort to a random sample of 100 fields would preclude any possibility of making a reasonable evaluation of natural gas reserves or checking the accuracy of estimates of natural gas reserves for Southern Louisiana.[35]

[13] On either theory of its investigation the Trade Commission's argument is unconvincing. If the Trade Commission is looking for an antitrust conspiracy, a random sample made up of data from 45% of the relevant fields should be adequate to turn up evidence of a conspiracy (if there is evidence to be turned up). If the FTC is investigating whether either the industry-wide definition of proved reserves or the manner of reporting such reserves is an unfair trade practice, we fail to see how a random sample of data from 45% of the fields would be inadequate. A random sample permits comparisons between producers or between producers and the AGA figures, especially since the FTC already has the AGA's complete field-by-field figures.[36] The District Court was entitled to conclude on the record before it that disclosure of data from all 220 fields would be burdensome, and that use of a random sample would neither preclude a reasonable evaluation of the manner in which reserves are estimated nor prohibit the Commission from checking the data as to its accuracy. We therefore affirm this aspect of the District Court's order.

On the other hand, the reasons for limiting disclosure to documents prepared during 1969, 1970, and 1971 are not as apparent to us. The Trade Commission's investigation was triggered, at least in part, by the drop in 1968 and 1969 of proved reserves as reported by the AGA. The Commission would thus appear to need data for a period of time preceding the reported drop in reserves in order to make comparisons. In this regard, we find the Commission's request for disclosure under specifications G, H, and I back through 1962 to be appropriate. We therefore conclude that the District Court's failure to require such disclosure is an abuse of discretion and must therefore be reversed.

IV. Confidentiality and Production at Situs

[14] The District Court attached the following conditions upon the disclosure of documents designated as confidential:

(1) The Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission is designated the custodian of the documents;

[151] (2) The documents (and presumably any documents or memoranda derived therefrom) must be kept in a depository with access restricted to the FTC employees assigned to the investigation;

(3) Documents can only be removed from the depository or used for other purposes with the court's permission; and

(4) Upon the termination of the investigation, the documents (and presumably all copies of documents) must be returned to their owner.

The Trade Commission does not question the confidential nature of the documents it seeks disclosed. Rather, its position is that the FTCA and the Commission's Rules of Practice provide appellees with adequate protection. In fact, the FTCA and the Rules of Practice merely state that the public disclosure of geophysical data or information and trade secrets is within the discretion of the Commission. 16 C.F.R. 4.11(d) clearly indicates that the Trade Commission will decide ultimately whether records exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act (as most of these records probably would be) will be disclosed.

The District Court was not required to rely on the unbounded discretion of the Trade Commission to keep the producers' estimates confidential.[37] In addition, we fail to see how the minor procedures imposed by the court will impose any substantial burden on the Commission's investigation. We therefore hold that the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it attached the conditions listed above to the disclosure of information by all seven appellees.[38]

[15] The Trade Commission also complains about the option permitting the production of documents for inspection where they are

[37] See note 4, supra. The action of the Trade Commission, in acceding to the telephoned demand of a Congressman for immediate access to the documents in so short a period of time as to preclude resort to a court, underlines the wisdom and reasonableness of the District Court's protective order on confidentiality. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure currently provide for motions to quash duly authorized subpoenas, but not phone calls.

[38] In order to protect confidential commercial information and trade secrets, District Courts frequently have required appropriate protection as a precondition to enforcement of FTC investigative subpoenas. See, e.g., FTC v. St. Regis Paper Co., 304 F.2d 731, 732 n. 1 (7th Cir. 1962); Graber Mfg. Co. v. Dixon, 223 F.Supp. 1020 (D.D.C. 1963); FTC v. Bowman, 149 F.Supp. 624 (N.D.Ill.), aff'd, 248 F.2d 456 (7th Cir. 1957); FTC v. Menzies, 145 F.Supp. 164, 171 (D.Md.1956), aff'd, 242 F.2d 81, 84 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 353 U.S. 957, 77 S.Ct. 863, 1 L.Ed.2d 908 (1957).

stored. The Supreme Court in CAB v. Hermann upheld the enforcement of a subpoena "with appropriate provisions for assuring the minimum interference with the conduct of the business of respondents."[39] The Second Circuit has also upheld a similar provision. It noted that "[r]equiring records to be produced away from the place where they are ordinarily kept may impose an unreasonable and unnecessary hardship which in itself would make the issuance of the subpoena, otherwise proper, arbitrary and capricious."[40] Since the number of documents to be produced will be quite large, it is not inappropriate to relieve appellees of some of the expense and burden entailed by permitting them the option of producing documents where they were stored.[41] It would then be the responsibility of the Trade Commission to copy and transport to Washington any documents they consider useful. We affirm the District Court as to the in situs condition.

V. The Superior Order

[152] [16] The Commission concedes that Superior does not report reserve estimates to or participate in, the work of the AGA. Since the FTC issued identical subpoenas to all producers, it was obvious to the District Court that several specifications, those relating to reporting and participating in the AGA, were not relevant to Superior. As a result, the District Court simply refused to enforce specifications G through J. In all other respects Superior will be required to provide the Commission with the same documents and information that is being required of the other six producers, subject to the confidentiality protections previously discussed. We affirm this order.

VI. Conclusion

[17] In the last analysis a petition for enforcement of an administrative subpoena duces tecum must be judged by the District Court on a case-by-case basis. Because questions of relevance and burdensomeness are peculiarly within the ken of the trial court, appellate tribunals should be wary of second-guessing. In our view, the District Court's orders represent a just and fair accommodation between the Trade Commission and the producers.

To summarize, we have affirmed the District Court's order in all respects save one, the time limitation in paragraph 2 of the six producers' order.

SUBPOENA DUCES TECUM

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

To Mr. A. C. Long, Chairman Executive Committee & Chief Executive Officer, Texaco, Inc.,
135 East 42nd Street, New York, New York. 10017

You are hereby required to appear before Donald K. Tenney, an Attorney and Examiner of the Federal Trade Commission, at Room 368, Federel Trade Commission Building, 6th and Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., in the City of Washington, D.C. 20580 on the 5th day of January, 1972, at 10:00 a.m., to testify in connection with the Commission's investigation of various corporations and persons, File No. 711 0042, pursuant to Commission Resolution dated June 3, 1971, a copy of which is attached and made a part hereof, for the purposes stated therein.

And you are hereby required to bring with you and produce at said time and place the following books, papers, and documents:

See attached "Definitions" and "Specifications."

Fail not at your peril

In testimony whereof, the undersigned, an authorized official of the Federal Trade Commission, has hereunto set his hand and caused the seal of said Federal Trade Commission to be affixed at Washington, D.C., this 24th day of November *19*71.

SEAL /s/ Assistant Director, Bureau of Competition.

DEFINITIONS

[154] As used herein, the term "documents" means all writings of every kind including books, records, folios, minutes, reports, memoranda, correspondence, agreements, discounted cash flow studies, cover sheets, calculation sheets, print outs, telegrams, diary entries, pamphlets, notes, charts, and tabulations in the possession, custody or control of the Company. The term "documents" also includes voice recordings and reproductions or film impressions of any of the aforementioned writings as well as copies of documents which are not identical duplicates of the originals and copies of documents of which the originals are not in the possession, custody or control of the Company. The term "documents" further includes all punch cards or other cards, tapes or recordings used in data processing, together with the programming instructions and other written material necessary to understand or use such punch cards, tapes or other recordings.

In response to specifications in which the term "documents" is followed by an asterisk (*), a verified written statement by an officer of the company containing the requested information may be submitted in lieu of the documents called for provided that the underlying documents or source materials are listed or otherwise specifically identified in, or as part of, such verified statement.

Each document submitted must be identified as to the specification or specifications to which it is responsive.

The term "the Company" means the corporation upon which this Subpoena was served as well as its directors, officers, employees, and agents; its subsidiaries and affiliates; and the directors, officers, employees and agents of its subsidiaries and affiliates. The term "the corporation" means the corporation upon which this Subpoena was served.

Unless otherwise stated, the following definitions apply to the specifications that ensue:

1. South Louisiana. That geographical area delineated by Map III, page 84, of the May, 1971 edition of Reserves of Crude Oil, Natural Gas Liquids, and Natural Gas in the United States and Canada and United States Productive Capacity as of December 31, 1970 including the offshore area. The term "Offshore South Louisiana" is defined as that geographic area which lies seaward from the Louisiana coastline. The South Louisiana Offshore Area is sometimes referred to as Federal Areas 1 through 4 and includes the West Cameron Area, East Cameron Area, Vermilion Area, South Marsh Island Area, Eugene Island Area, Shoal Area, South Pelto Area, Bay Marchand Area, South Timbalier Area, Grand Isle Area, West Delta Area, South Pass Area, Main Pass Area, Breton Sound Area, Chandeleur Area and Chandeleur Sound Area and any additions thereto, as indicated on the United States Geological Survey "Oil and Gas Development Map of the Gulf Coast State of Louisiana Outer Continental Shelf", as revised on January 5, 1971.

[155] 2. Net Production. The definition appearing in Technical Report No. 1, Standard Definitions for Petroleum Statistics (First Edition, July 1, 1969), at page 11, is adopted.

3. Natural Gas Present or Recoverable or Ultimately Recoverable.

a. Present. Natural gas in place, i. e., existing either in the gaseous phase or in solution with crude oil in a natural underground reservoir or reservoirs.

b. Recoverable. Natural gas in place that is producible.

c. Ultimately recoverable. Natural gas in place that is producible, together with its cumulative production.

4. Field. A field is an area consisting of a single reservoir or multiple reservoirs all grouped on, or related to, the same individual geological features and/or stratigraphical condition. A reservoir is a porous and permeable underground formation containing an individual and separate natural accumulation of hydrocarbons (oil and/or gas) which is confined by impermeable rock or water barriers and is characterized by a single natural pressure system.

5. Completion Date. The first date on which any permanent equipment for the production of oil or gas is installed in a well. Completion reports may relate to the abandonment of a well or to the installation of permanent productive equipment.

6 & 7. Associated Gas; Dissolved Gas. The definitions of these two terms that appear in Technical Report No. 1, Standard Definitions for Petroleum Statistics (First Edition, July 1, 1969), page 6, are adopted.

8. Nonassociated Gas. Natural gas which is in a reservoir or reservoirs not containing significant quantities of crude oil.

9-13. Proved Reserves; Revisions; Extensions; New Field Discoveries; and New Reservoir Discoveries in Old Fields. The definitions of these five terms that appear in Reserves of Crude Oil, Natural Gas Liquids, and Natural Gas in the United States and Canada and United States Productive Capacity as of December 31, 1970 at pages 102-104, are adopted.

14. Dedicated Reserves. The volume of natural gas committed to a pipeline company and for which both the seller and the pipeline company have received certificate authorization from the Federal Power Commission.

SPECIFICATIONS

A. Documents * which will indicate the correct legal name and business address of the corporation, its date and state of incorporation, and the name, position and home address of each officer and director of said corporation.

B. Documents * which will indicate the correct legal name and business address of the parent of the corporation, the date and state of incorporation of the parent and the percentage ownership the parent has in the corporation, and the name, position and home address of each officer and director of the parent.

[156] C. The corporation's Annual Reports for each of the years 1966, 1967, 1968, 1969 and 1970.

D. Documents * which will indicate the name and address of each subsidiary, affiliate, and division of the corporation and of the divisions of each such subsidiary and affiliate engaged in the exploration, development, production, or distribution of natural gas; the function(s) as heretofore set forth of each; and the dates and states of incorporation and the names, positions, and addresses of officers, directors, managers of each subsidiary, affiliate, and division.

E. Documents * which will indicate (1) each type of customer purchasing natural gas, produced in South Louisiana, from the corporation, its subsidiaries and affiliates and (2) the manner and methods of distribution of such natural gas to each such type of customer.

F. Documents * which will indicate the following for each of the years 1966 through 1970:

1. Total net production of natural gas, in units, in (a) the United States and (b) South Louisiana, by the corporation, its subsidiaries and affiliates.
2. Total unit and dollar volume of sales of the total net production of natural gas produced in (a) the United States and (b) South Louisiana, by the corporation, its subsidiaries and affiliates.
3. Total dollar volume of sales of the total net production of natural gas produced in South Louisiana by the corporation, its subsidiaries and affiliates to each type of customer identified in Specification E(1)—for 1969 and 1970 only.

G. Documents either received (from whatever source) or written by the Company, in whole or in part, at any time between January 1, 1962 to December 31, 1970, which contain estimates or evaluations of the volume of natural gas present or recoverable or ultimately recoverable (1) throughout all of South Louisiana (2) throughout all of Offshore South Louisiana and/or (3) in specific fields, portions of fields, leaseholds and/or portions of leaseholds located in Offshore South Louisiana.

Excluded from this specification are any documents previously made available to the Commission by the American Gas Association and presently in the custody of Price, Waterhouse & Company, 1801 K Street, Washington, D.C. Included in this specification by way of illustration but not limitation are documents containing estimates or evaluations including re-estimates or reevaluations made in connection with or in preparation for or as the result of the following: (1) bidding on or nominating leases (2) deciding whether to erect permanent platforms (3) compiling or inventorying total company reserves or supply (4) negotiating or contracting for the sale of natural gas, or for the joint or common exploration, development, production, purchase or sale of acreage, or for obtaining bank loans (5) filing depreciation expense schedules with Internal Revenue Service or (6) submitting field-by-field estimates to subcommittees or committees of the American Gas Association or the American Petroleum Institute.

[157] H. Documents * indicating any or all of the following with regard to each field and leasehold in Offshore South Louisiana for which estimates or evaluations of the volume of natural gas, pertaining to the whole or a portion thereof, are produced pursuant to Specification G:

1. For each such field and portion thereof, its name and the number(s) of each block number comprising said field or portion thereof—if the field or field portion is situated at least in part in a portion of a block, the portion of the block as well, e. g., "NW 1/4";
2. For each such leasehold and portion thereof, the OCS number and the name(s) and location(s) of the field(s) and portion(s) thereof comprising such leasehold or portion thereof;
3. The pipeline company(ies) serving each such field, leasehold, or portion thereof;
4. The producer(s) and the operator(s) of each such field, leasehold, or portion thereof, indicating the precise interest each such producer and operator has in the acreage;
5. For each such field, leasehold and portion thereof, the location (on a map) and designation of each well drilled including (for each such well):
    a. The current status as classified by the Company, e. g., "dry and abandoned", "temporarily abandoned", "suspended", "shut-in", "service", "producer", etc.;
    b. Whether classified by the Company as an oil or gas well at the time of (1) application for drilling (2) the filing of each completion report (3) currently;
    c. The number of reservoirs containing natural gas that have been penetrated by the well;
    d. The date drilling commenced; the date total depth was reached; first date of testing; first date of testing officially reported; completion date; date commenced producing.

I. Documents either received (from whatever source) or written by the Company, in whole or in part, at any time subsequent to January 1, 1962, which refer, analyze, compare, comment on, set forth, and/or relate to any or all of the following:

1. Any natural gas estimates or evaluations called for by Specification G; the preparation or completion of such estimates or evaluations; the procedures, criteria or interpretations used in such preparation or completion; the identity of organizational units and personnel of the Company involved in such preparation or completion;

2. Any natural gas estimates or evaluations made available to the Commission by the American Gas Association and presently at Price, Waterhouse & Co., or appearing in any American Gas Association Report on Natural Reserves, published subsequent to January 1, 1967, including the constituent categories of these estimates such as "proved reserves", "revisions", "extensions", "new field discoveries", "new reservoir discoveries in old fields"; the preparation or completion of such estimates or evaluations; the pro[158]cedures, criteria or interpretations used in such preparation or completion; the organizational units and personnel of the Company involved in such preparation or completion;

3. Any lease nominations and bids, any agreements for joint or common leasing, exploration, development, production, purchase or sale, or any cash flow or economic feasibility studies preparatory to leasing, exploring, developing, purchasing or selling, which involve Offshore South Louisiana acreage;

4. Any compilation, report or study of "dedicated reserves";

5. Whether any well designated in response to Specification H-5 contains natural gas in sufficient quantities as to be capable of producing in paying quantities.

J. Documents either received (from whatever source) or written by the Company, in whole or in part, at any time subsequent to January 1, 1966, which refer, analyze, compare, comment on, set forth, and/or relate to any or all of the following:

1. Any failures or delays, for whatever reason, in reporting proved reserves of natural gas to the American Gas Association, including any failures or delays by personnel of the Association to identify to subcommittee members all fields containing proved reserves;

2. The classification or exclusion or inclusion of volumes of natural gas as proved reserves;

3. The relationship between increases or decreases of crude oil proved reserves with increases or decreases of associated, dissolved or associated-dissolved natural gas proved reserves;

4. Negative revisions to American Gas Association proved reserve estimates because of clerical or mathematical error.

K. Documents either received (from whatever source) or written by the Company, in whole or in part, at any time subsequent to January 1, 1962, which refer, analyze, compare, comment on, set forth, and/or relate to any or all of the following:

1. The relation between the amount of "proved reserves" and the rate allowed, to be allowed, or that may be allowed for natural gas by the Federal Power Commission;
2. The reporting of lower "proved reserve" figures.

L. Documents * naming all employees of the corporation, its subsidiaries and affiliates who have, any time since January 1, 1966 with regard to Offshore South Louisiana, estimated, evaluated or enumerated natural gas proved reserves, dissolved gas proved reserves, potential gas supply or well drilling activity either for the American Gas Association, American Petroleum Institute, Potential Gas Committee, American Association of Petroleum Geologists or the International Oil Scouts, including local scout checks, indicating for each person named (1) the association for which he estimated or enumerated (2) whether a member of the association (3) what was estimated or enumerated and (4) the dates for which he estimated or enumerated for the particular association.

ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission ("Trade Commission") having petitioned on June 13, 1973, for enforcement of subpoenas duces tecum issued by an Assistant Director of the Trade Commission's Bureau of Competition to each of the above captioned respondents on November 24, 1971, in the course of a Trade Commission investigation into natural gas reserve reporting procedures (FTC Investigation File No. 711 0042); and the respondents having opposed enforcement of said subpoenas, contending that the principles of primary jurisdiction and collateral estoppel preclude the Trade Commission from seeking the demanded documents or data for purposes of determining the validity or accuracy of natural gas reserve estimates, and contending further, inter alia, that certain demands of the subpoenas are irrelevant to any proper subject or area of investigation and are unduly broad and burdensome; and the parties having fully briefed and presented oral argument on the issues; and the Court upon consideration of all the premises, being of the opinion that the Trade Commission is authorized to pursue the investigation to determine whether there exists any evidence of conspiracy in the reporting of proved natural gas reserve estimates to the American Gas Association by respondents, but that the subpoenas duces tecum are improper insofar as they seek data for the purposes of enabling the Trade Commission to attempt to deter[160]mine natural gas reserves or the validity or accuracy of natural gas reserve estimates, matters already considered and ruled upon by the Federal Power Commission, and the Court being of the further opinion that the subpoenas are improper in other respects as well and should not be enforced as issued:

It is now therefore ordered:

1. Enforcement of specifications A, B, C, D, E, and F of the subpoenas duces tecum is hereby granted. Enforcement of specifications G, H, I, J, K, and L is hereby denied except as provided below.

2. Respondents shall produce documents as called for by specifications G, H, and I of the subpoenas duces tecum for the years 1969, 1970 and 1971, subject to the following modifications and limitations:

(a) Production shall be limited to documents containing or underlying proved natural gas reserve estimates. Raw field data, bid calculation data, and bid calculation files are not required to be produced. As regards underlying back-up data for each estimate called for by specification G, only the immediate data used to make the estimate need be submitted. For estimates arrived at volumetrically, specification I(1) will be satisfied by supplying all the underlying numbers which were used in the formula including the recovery factor and the size of the reservoir(s). As for the estimates arrived at by pressure decline curves, specification I(1) will be satisfied by submitting the curve used.

(b) Production of documents shall be made with respect only to a random sample of 100 of those offshore Southern Louisiana fields which were included in reports for 1971 by the Southern Louisiana Subcommittee of the American Gas Association Committee of Natural Gas Reserves. This random sample shall be selected by a procedure agreed upon between Trade Commission and respondents.

(c) Each respondent shall make production with respect to the fields, selected in the manner described in paragraph 2(b), in which it had an ownership interest as of the date reports were submitted by the Southern Louisiana Subcommittee of the American Gas Association Committee of Natural Gas Reserves.

(d) All production ordered pursuant to this paragraph 2 shall be made for the sole purpose of permitting the Trade Commission to investigate whether there is a conspiracy in the reporting of natural gas proved reserve estimates, and not for the purpose of permitting the Trade Commission to investigate or determine the amount of proved natural gas reserves.

3. Respondents shall produce documents as called for by specifications J and K of the subpoenas duces tecum, subject to the following modifications and limitations:

(a) Production shall be limited to documents relating to proved natural gas reserve estimates in those offshore Southern Louisiana fields which were included in reports for 1971 by the Southern Louisiana Subcommittee of the American Gas Association Committee of Natural Gas Reserves.

[161] (b) Production shall be limited to documents prepared or dated during the years 1966 through 1971, inclusive, which were exchanged between or among, or constitute, contain or refer to any agreement, arrangement or communication between or among, respondent or others, including the American Gas Association.

4. Respondents shall produce documents as called for by specification L, except production shall be limited to the employees who have acted with respect to proved natural gas reserve estimates for offshore Southern Louisiana during the year 1966 through 1971, inclusive.

5. In complying with this Order, the definition of terms contained in the original subpoenas duces tecum shall apply.

6. Respondents shall comply with this Order within 180 days after the date upon which they are advised of the sample fields selected in accordance with paragraph 2(b) hereof.

7. Each respondent shall have the option of producing documents called for by this Order at the corporate office or field location where the responsive documents are normally maintained or at the Federal Trade Commission's offices in Washington, D.C. With respect to documents as to which any respondent elects to make production at a corporate office or field location, the Trade Commission shall inspect and reproduce any of said documents at such office or field location at, such other location as agreed upon by the respective parties, and shall bear any costs of reproduction or copying which the Trade Commission may require or desire.

8. Any document produced under this Order which contains confidential information may be designated as being confidential by the respective respondents, in which event all documents so designated shall be subject to the following protective treatment:

(a) Documents designated as confidential by a respondent shall be deposited with and be maintained by a custodian who shall be the Secretary to the Commission. Unless and until otherwise ordered by the Court upon due notice to all affected parties documents so designated may be inspected only at the depository location and only by employees of the Trade Commission officially assigned to the Trade Commission's investigation entitled "File No. 711 0042." Said documents shall be used only in connection with said investigation, and said employees shall not suffer or permit disclosure or copying of any such document, or any portion thereof, or any information contained therein to any other person.

(b) Unless and until otherwise ordered by the Court upon due notice to all affected parties, documents designated confidential under this Order shall remain in custody of the Custodian and neither the documents nor any copies thereof shall be removed from such custody.

(c) At the conclusion of the Trade Commission's investigation pursuant to which such confidential documents have been produced, all documents so designated as confidential, together with all copies [162] thereof, shall be returned to the respective respondent unless the Trade Commission seeks and obtains an order of the Court providing otherwise.

(d) The protective provisions of this Order shall be deemed to apply to the Trade Commission, to the individual Commissioners of the Trade Commission and to all persons in the employ of the Trade Commission; sanctions for violation of any provision of this Order may be imposed on the Trade Commission, or any person who violates any provision of this Order.

9. The Court reserves its ruling as to any and all matters, contentions or issues not specifically disposed of by this Order. Jurisdiction over these proceedings is retained for the purposes of providing other and further relief as necessary.

APPENDIX C

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Federal Trade Commission
v. Civil Action No. 1091-73
Superior Oil Company

ORDER

Upon consideration of the Federal Trade Commission's petition for enforcement of a subpoena duces tecum, the matter having been fully briefed and argued before the Court, and the Court being advised in the premises, it is this 22nd day of March, 1974,

ORDERED, That the respondent, The Superior Oil Co., Inc., shall comply, within 180 days from the date on which this Order becomes final, with Specifications A through F and K through L of the subpoena, provided that Specifications A, B, D, E and F may be complied with by submitting a verified written statement by an officer of the Company containing the requested information in lieu of the documents specified, and it is

FURTHER ORDERED, That as to the respondent, The Superior Oil Co., Inc., Specifications G through J of the subpoena be, and the same hereby are, denied enforcement and quashed; and it is

[163] FURTHER ORDERED, That any document produced under this Order which contains confidential information may be designated as being confidential by the respondent, in which event all documents so designated shall be subject to the following protective treatment:

(a) Documents designated as confidential by a respondent shall be deposited with and be maintained by a custodian who shall be the Secretary to the Commission. Unless and until otherwise ordered by the Court upon due notice to all affected parties documents so designated may be inspected only at the depository location and only by employees of the Trade Commission officially assigned to the Trade Commission's investigation entitled "File No. 711 0042." Said documents shall be used only in connection with said investigation, and said employees shall not suffer or permit disclosure or copying of any such document, or any portion thereof, or any information contained therein to any other person.

(b) Unless and until otherwise ordered by the Court upon due notice to all affected parties, documents designated confidential under this Order shall remain in custody of the Custodian and neither the documents nor any copies thereof shall be removed from such custody.

(c) At the conclusion of the Trade Commission's investigation pursuant to which such confidential documents have been produced, all documents so designated as confidential, together with all copies thereof, shall be returned to the respondent unless the Trade Commission seeks and obtains an order of the Court providing otherwise.

(d) The protective provisions of this Order shall be deemed to apply to the Trade Commission, to the individual Commissioners of the Trade Commission and to all persons in the employ of the Trade Commission; sanctions for violation of any provision of this Order may be imposed on the Trade Commission, or any person who violates any provision of this Order.

The Court reserves its ruling as to any and all matters, contentions or issues not specifically disposed of by this Order. Jurisdiction over these proceedings is retained for the purposes of providing other and further relief as necessary.

So Ordered This 22 Day of March, 1974.

GATES RENTAL, INC., et al. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

Civ. A. No. C75-95A. F.T.C. Docket No. C-2245.

(United States District Court, Northern District of Georgia, August 13, 1975)

On motion to dismiss, or in the alternative for summary judgment, court held that the F.T.C. has yet to take "final agency action"; plaintiffs have failed to exhaust their administrative remedies, and, therefore, it would be improper for court to intervene at this time.

Motion to dismiss granted.

Before May, Jr., District Judge.

Order of Court

This is an action for declaratory relief filed by Gates Rental, Inc., et al., against the Federal Trade Commission seeking review of a consent order entered in July 1972. The case is presently before the Court on the Commission's motion to dismiss, or in the alternative for summary judgment, or, if dismissal and summary judgment are denied, to strike the plaintiffs' demand for a jury trial.

* Not otherwise reported; affirmed, 5 Cir. 1976, 532 F.2d 184. See also p. 1158 herein. For case before the Commission, see 81 F.T.C. 86, 82 F.T.C. 263 and 83 F.T.C. 823.

The facts are as follows: Gates Rental, Inc., a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Georgia, is engaged in the sale and rental of televisions and stereophonic equipment. On February 24, 1972, Gates received a notice from the Secretary of the Commission informing them that the Commission had determined to institute a formal proceeding against Gates for false, misleading, and deceptive sales and advertising practices in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, and the Truth-in-Lending Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1601, et seq. Thereafter, on July 11, 1972, the matter was disposed of by the entry of a consent order as provided in the Commission's Rules, Part 2, Subpart C. Plaintiff's complaint is with regard to paragraph one of that consent decree which orders plaintiff to cease and desist from:

> Representing in any advertisement, directly or by implication, or in any oral statements made to a customer, that an individual can rent or purchase any of respondents' merchandise at a discount price, or an inexpensive price, or an advantageous price, or for any specified amount, payment or period of time without disclosing in every instance in a clear and meaningful way, the average prevailing retail price of the merchandise or comparable merchandise using the term "average retail price" together with either:
> (a) the total dollar cost to the individual of purchasing the same merchandise under respondents' "rent-to-buy" plan, using the term "our total purchase price;" or
> (b) the total charge for renting the same merchandise for twelve months, using the term "rent for one year. (emphasis added)

It is the emphasized phrase which plaintiffs dispute. They assert that during the negotiations prior to the entry of the consent order counsel for the Commission represented to them that the disputed language would only be applicable to advertisements and oral statements made in connection with the rent or purchase of merchandise at discount, inexpensive, or advantageous prices. Plaintiffs contend that they signed the consent order in reliance on this representation.

Thereafter, plaintiffs learned from conversations with counsel for the Commission that the drafter's intent was that the language "or for any specified amount, payment or period of time" be applicable to all aspects of plaintiff's business. On August 7, 1972, plaintiffs filed with the Commission a Petition for Modification of the Commission's Consent Order requesting that the language in question contained in paragraph one of the consent order be deleted so as to conform the order to the purported intent of the parties at the time of execution. On January 23, 1973, the Commission issued an order denying relief. The order indicated that the consent decree was not as limited as plaintiffs suggested but also applied whenever, in connection with plaintiffs' "rent-to-buy" plan or similar installment purchase plan, or any rental plan, a specified amount, payment or period of time is represented.

However, the Commission recognized that the consent decree as worded could be construed to apply to business transactions not falling within such plans and, accordingly, proposed a revised paragraph one to which plaintiffs had 20 days to accept. Plaintiffs rejected the proposed modification and on February 21, 1973, submitted a Petition for Interpretation of Order Issued on January 23, 1973. Furthermore, on April 11, 1973, plaintiffs filed another Petition for Modification requesting that language be added to paragraph one making it inapplicable to individualized oral responses to telephonic or oral inquiries initiated by customers. On October 9, 1973, the Commission denied this petition and ordered plaintiffs to comply with the consent order issued July 11, 1972. In December 1973, plaintiffs filed a petition for review of the October 9 order in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. The Court of Appeals, in September 1974, dismissed the petition on jurisdictional grounds without prejudice to plaintiffs' right to proceed in the district court.

In September 1972 the plaintiffs submitted to the Commission their compliance report in accordance with the consent order. Thereafter, in December 1974 plaintiffs received a letter from the Commission indicating that processing of the compliance report had been suspended pending final disposition of plaintiffs' original petition for modification and requiring plaintiff to submit an update of the compliance report within 30 days. Plaintiffs contend that the request for this additional report is neither authorized nor provided for in the consent order.

Plaintiffs contend that the consent order issued July 11, 1972, must be set aside or, in the alternative, be reformed to reflect the intent of the parties when said decree was executed.

The preliminary issue that must be resolved is whether the case is ripe for judicial review. The Court holds that the case is premature as the plaintiffs have not exhausted their administrative remedies and, therefore, defendant's motion to dismiss is GRANTED.

Plaintiffs claim the right to judicial review under Section 703 of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 703, and the Court construes this claim as one asserting the full range of judicial review provisions provided in the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 701, et seq. Under 5 U.S.C. § 703 a judicial review proceeding is to be had in a court specified by statute or in the absence or inadequacy thereof "in a court of competent jurisdiction." However, under 5 U.S.C. § 704 only "final agency action" is reviewable. See also, Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136 (1967).

In the present case the Commission has yet to give the consent order a concrete interpretation and has not accepted or rejected a compliance report submitted by plaintiffs. Indeed, plaintiffs have failed to submit the updated report requested by the Commission which has the authority to compel the filing of additional reports to monitor compliance with its cease and desist orders. United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632 (1950); National Petroleum Refiners Ass'n v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 482 F.2d 672 (D.C. Cir. 1973); see also, California Bankers Ass'n v. Schultz, 416 U.S. 21 (1974); Securities and Exchange Comm'n v. Brigadoon Scotch Distributing Co., 480 F.2d 1047 (2d Cir. 1973). The Commission has yet to determine whether or not the plaintiffs are in compliance with the consent order and thus the plaintiffs are asking this Court to speculate as to the Commission's ultimate response to the plaintiffs' conduct. The courts have wisely refused to take jurisdiction to make such decisions. See Aetna Life Insurance v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227 (1937).

Although the plaintiffs have expressed a fear that the Commission will reject their compliance report, such fear is not sufficient to merit judicial review at the present time. The Commission interpretation of the consent order feared by the plaintiffs may be changed or never enforced. See Vulcanized Rubber & Plastics Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 258 F.2d 684 (D.C. Cir. 1958). A primary purpose of the exhaustion of administrative remedies requirement is the avoidance of premature interruption of the administrative process by the courts. Principles of administrative autonomy require that agencies be given sufficient opportunity to exercise the discretion and expertise that are frequently involved in administrative decision-making. McKart v. United States, 395 U.S. 185, 193, 195 (1969). As stated by the Supreme Court:

> The administrative agency is created as a separate entity and invested with certain powers and duties. The courts ordinarily should not interfere with an agency until it has completed its action or else has clearly exceeded its jurisdiction. McKart v. United States, supra, at 1974.

The basic purpose of the exhaustion doctrine is to allow an administrative agency to perform functions within its special competence–to make a factual record, to apply its expertise and discretionary authority, and to resolve disputes and correct its own errors so as to moot judicial controversies. See McKart v. United States, supra, 194-95; Parisi v. Davidson, 405 U.S. 34, 37 (1972). Having neither received the requested updated report on compliance from plaintiffs nor ruled on plaintiffs' specific conduct, the Commission has yet to take "final agency action." Plaintiffs have failed to exhaust their administrative remedies and, therefore, it would be improper for this Court to intervene in the administrative process at the present time. As the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction, the defendant's motion to dismiss is hereby ORDERED GRANTED.

(United States District Court, Southern District of New York, August 28, 1975)

In denying an action to stay accumulation, during adjudication, of civil penalties for alleged violations of F.T.C. consent orders, court held that, since amount of civil penalties imposed was at court's discretion, due process right of plaintiffs had not been violated.

Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, New York, N.Y., for plaintiff.

Before TENNEY, District Judge:

MEMORANDUM

Plaintiffs, the six major producers of cigarettes in this country,[1] have moved by order to show cause for an Order of this Court granting them preliminary injunctive relief staying, pending final judgment, the accumulation of civil penalties for alleged violations of the identical consent orders entered into by each of the companies with the Federal Trade Commission in March of 1972. For the reasons stated below, the request for a preliminary injunction is denied.

* Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶60,473 at 67,104 (1975-2 Trade Cases). See also pp. 1525 and 1542 herein. For case before the Commission, see 80 F.T.C. 455.

[1] Mr. Weisberg, the Assistant United States Attorney, made a motion on the record in open court on August 25, 1975 for consolidation of the six cases filed in this Court. The motion was granted and the Assistant United States Attorney was directed to submit an order to that effect.

The purpose of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the status quo pending a determination on the merits. Checker Motors Corp. v. Chrysler Corp. 405 F.2d 319, 323 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 999 (1969); Hamilton Watch Co. v. Benrus Watch Co. 206 F.2d 738, 742 (2d Cir. 1953). Such an injunction may never be obtained as a matter of right, but is clearly addressed to the discretion of the district court. Yakus v. United States, 321 U.S. 414 (1944); Checker Motors Corp. v. Chrysler Corp., supra, 405 F.2d at 323.

Historically this remedy has been viewed as drastic or extraordinary in nature and, absent a clear showing that movant has carried the burden of persuasion, the relief will be denied. Dopp v. Franklin National Bank, 461 F.2d 873, 878 (2d Cir. 1972); Checker Motors Corp. v. Chrysler Corp., supra, 405 F.2d at 323. That burden consists of showing either a reasonable probability of success on the merits and irreparable injury or that movants have raised serious questions going to the merits and that the balancing of the equities tips decidedly in their favor. Robert W. Stark, Jr., Inc. v. New York Stock Exchange, Inc. 466 F.2d 743, 744 (2d Cir. 1972); Checker Motors Corp. v. Chrysler Corp., supra, 405 F.2d at 323; Crimmins v. American Stock Exchange, Inc., 346 F. Supp. 1256, 1258-59 (S. D. N. Y. 1972). An additional factor of relevance to be considered is the public interest. American Motorists Ins. Co. v. City Wide Transportation Co., 308 F. Supp. 1080, 1084 (S. D. N. Y. 1969); 7 J. Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 65.04[1], at 47 (2d ed. 1948).

Since the issues of irreparable harm, the balancing of the equities, and the public interest will be dispositive of the motion, the Court will move directly to a consideration of those issues. Assuming, for the moment, that plaintiffs have at least raised serious questions going to the merits, they must then demonstrate that, on balance, the equities in the present situation tip decidedly in their favor. In the alternative, assuming that plaintiffs have demonstrated a reasonable probability of success on the merits, then they must further demonstrate irreparable injury in the absence of the relief requested.

On the question of irreparable injury, plaintiffs allege that they face a denial of due process should the stay be denied. In the absence of this relief, plaintiffs feel that they are placed in an impossible predicament, i.e., they are faced with a choice of acquiescing in the findings of the Federal Trade Commission (regarding violations of the 1972 consent order) which they consider to be erroneous, or of awaiting the Commission's enforcement proceeding in the face of ever-mounting civil penalties. This dilemma, plaintiffs contend, would, in effect, deny them a forum in which to protest the ruling and, in doing so, deny them due process. In support of this argument they cite St. Regis Paper Co. v. United States, 368 U.S. 208 (1961).

The St. Regis case, however, is distinguishable from the instant case. The penalty provision applicable in St. Regis was mandatory in nature. The penalty provision applicable in the instant case, 15 U.S.C. § 45(l), reads as follows:

> (l) Any person, partnership, or corporation who violates an order of the Commission after it has become final, and while such order is in effect, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 for each violation, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the Attorney General of the United States. Each separate violation of such an order shall be a separate offense, except that in the case of a violation through continuing failure to obey or neglect to obey a final order of the Commission, each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense. In such actions, the United States district courts are empowered to grant mandatory injunctions and such other and further equitable relief as they deem appropriate in the enforcement of such final orders of the Commission. (Supp. 1975) (emphasis added).

As can clearly be seen, the penalty provision of § 45(l) merely fixes the upper limit of the penalty and any penalties to be ultimately assessed are discretionary with the court. United States v. J. B. Williams Company, Inc., 498 F.2d 414, 438 (2d Cir. 1974); United States v. Beatrice Foods Co., 322 F. Supp. 139, 141 (D. Minn. 1971).

In reaching its decision as to the imposition of penalties, the Court may consider, inter alia, the ability of the violator to pay, the good or bad faith of the violator, the degree of due care exercised, the injury to the public, and the delay on the part of the Federal Trade Commission in initiating the enforcement suit. United States v. J. B. Williams Company, Inc., supra, 498 F.2d at 438; United States v. Ancorp National Services, Inc., 367 F. Supp. 1221, 1224 (S. D. N. Y. 1973); United States v. Beatrice Foods Company, 351 F. Supp. 969, 971 (p. Minn. 1972), aff'd 493 F.2d 1259 (8th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 43 U. S. L. W. 3474 (U.S. March 4, 1975); United States v. H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc. 262 F. Supp. 383, 388-89 (S.D.N.Y. 1966). Thus, penalties to be assessed, if any, will be tempered by these considerations.

In addressing this question as well as the question of the public interest involved in the request for a stay of an assessment of penalties under § 45(l), the United States District Court for the District of Columbia (per Parker, J.) stated:

> The strong public interest in this area requires that possible penalties not be stayed pending such litigation in order to avoid encouraging frivolous suits for purposes of delay. Of course court administrative delays and the plaintiff's good faith on the one hand, and, as in this case, the unreasonableness or frivolousness of plaintiff's grounds for review on the other hand, are factors which a court may consider in assessing penalties. United States v. H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc., 262 F. Supp. 383 (S. D. N. Y. 1966). Floersheim v. Weinburger 346 F. Supp. 950, 956 (D.D.C. 1972).

This Court is in agreement with the views expressed by Judge Parker in Floersheim and must conclude that plaintiffs have failed in their burden of showing either irreparable injury or that the balancing of the equities tips decidedly in their favor. Far from being subjected to a denial of due process, plaintiffs' risks here are no greater than the risks attendant in any litigation. In the face of these findings and in light of the remarks made by Judge Parker in Floersheim, it seems unnecessary to comment further on the question of the public interest.

Accordingly, plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction is denied.

So ordered.

CONTROL DATA CORPORATION ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

Civ. A. No. 4-74-Civ. 412. F.T.C. Docket No. 8940.

(United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, September 3, 1975)

Plaintiffs have moved for partial summary judgment on the complaint filed herein, and for an Order requiring the production of certain documents for in camera inspection by the Court. Defendants have filed a cross-motion for summary judgment.

Oral argument was heard on March 18, 1975.

The Court has considered the affidavits and exhibits and the briefs and arguments of counsel.

On all of the files and proceedings herein,

IT IS ORDERED:

1. That the defendants' motion for summary judgment is denied.

2. That the defendants within twenty days of the date of this Order disclose to plaintiffs a list containing the names and last known home and business addresses and telephone numbers of all persons known to the defendants or to the employees and staff of defendant Federal Trade Commission to have knowledge or information relating to all or any part of the allegations set forth in defendant Federal Trade Commission's complaint against plaintiffs filed in FTC Docket No. 8940, provided however that the defendants may delete from such list the names of any of the staff of the Federal Trade Commission and the names of any persons currently employed by the plaintiffs, and provided further that the defendants may petition this Court in camera to strike the name of any individual the inclusion of whose name on the list would disclose his status as a confidential source.

3. That the defendants promptly disclose the foregoing list as well as all other records that defendant Federal Trade Commission has previously indicated that it was willing to disclose in reply to plaintiffs' written petition of March 19, 1974, for disclosure of records pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, without demand or imposition of any fees for services expended by defendants in connection with locating and segregating said records.

* Not otherwise reported. See also p. 1500 herein. Appeal of F.T.C. denied 1-02-76, 8 Cir. (1976). For case before the Commission, see 86 F.T.C. 180, 1094.

4. That the defendants within twenty days of the date of this Order produce to this Court for its in camera inspection all of defendant Federal Trade Commission's records responsive to the plaintiffs' aforesaid petition for disclosure of records pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act which defendants contend are interagency or intra-agency memoranda exempt from the mandatory disclosure requirements of the Freedom of Information Act under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5).

MEMORANDUM

On October 3, 1973, defendant Federal Trade Commission [FTC] filed a complaint against Control Data Corporation [CDC] and Automation Institute of America, Inc. [AIA], the plaintiffs herein, commencing administrative proceedings for alleged violations of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, in the conduct of certain vocational education programs in the field of electronic data processing. AIA is a wholly owned subsidiary of CDC. On October 22, 1973, CDC and AIA moved to dismiss the administrative complaint, alleging that a 13 month lapse between their submission of a proposed consent decree and the filing of the complaint constituted prejudicial delay, in violation of §§ 6(b) and (e) of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 555(b) and (e). In pursuing that motion, CDC and AIA have made several requests for the production by the FTC of certain documents alleged to be relevant to the issue of prejudicial delay. Generally, they have first requested the Administrative Law Judge to issue a subpoena in the underlying administrative action and, when that request has been denied in whole or in part, the companies have submitted formal petitions to the FTC for production of the documents under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3) ["FOIA"]. In a prior action brought in this Court the companies were partially successful in compelling production of a portion of one document. See Control Data Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 4-74-Civ. 25 (D. Minn. May 3, 1975).

In the present action, also commenced pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3), the plaintiffs seek to compel the production of certain additional documents not covered in this Court's prior Order. A formal petition for the production of these documents was first presented to the Secretary of the FTC on March 19, 1974, and consisted of the following five "specifications":

1. All records setting forth the name, last known residence address, last known residence phone number, last known business affiliation, last known business address, and/or last known business phone number of each person (excepting solely members of the Commission's staff) known to the Commission having knowledge or information relating to all, any, or any part of the allegations set forth in the Commission's Complaint in the matter of Control Data Corporation and Automation Institute of America, Inc. (FTC Docket No. 8940);

2. All records concerning or in any way related to the present or former existence at any time since January 1, 1969, of every committee, group, task force, or other organization, whether formal or informal, in which the Commission was a member or was otherwise represented, which committee, group, task force or other organization was organized, in whole or in part, for the purpose of studying, reviewing, making recommendations and/or coming to conclusions concerning private vocational education in the United States;

3. For each committee, group, task force, or other organization described in specification 2, above, all records setting forth the name of each agency, department or other arm of the federal or any state government that is/was a member of said committee, group, task force, or other organization and all records setting forth the name, title, last known business address and/or last known business telephone number of each employee of each of the aforesaid agencies, departments, or arms of government who represented their respective agency, department, or arm of government at meetings of said committee, group, task force, or other organization.

4. All records setting forth or in any way related to the substance of and/or the reason(s) for each of the Commission's revisions of or amendments to the first published version of the Commission's guidebook, "Our Vocational Training Can Guarantee You the Job of a Lifetime";

5. All records setting forth or in any way related to:

(a) the development and/or preparation of Guide 10(e) of the Commission's "Guides for Private Vocational and Home Study Schools" [16 CFR 254.10(e)];

(b) the failure or omission of Guide 10(e) to specify with any degree of particularity the information which should be disclosed to prospective consumers; and/or

(c) any proposed versions of Guide 10(e) that differed from the final version of said Guide as published in 16 CFR 254.

By letter dated May 23, 1974, the FTC informed the plaintiffs that: (1) it would grant access to some of the documents responsive to specifications two through five; (2) it would not grant access to any of its documents responsive to specification one, because all such documents were "part of active investigatory files" and thus exempt from disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7); and (3) it would not grant access to certain documents admittedly responsive to specifications two through five, because such documents were interagency or intra-agency memoranda containing "no clearly severable factual portions" and thus exempt from disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). On approximately June 10, 1974, the plaintiffs were informed that none of the documents which the FTC was willing to voluntarily release would be forthcoming until payment of a "search and segregation fee" of $183.00. The plaintiffs have refused to pay such a fee and, hence, have not yet obtained any of the documents specified in the March 19 petition.

The Court now has before it the following motions. The plaintiffs have moved for partial summary judgment and for an Order requiring the production of certain documents for in camera inspection by the Court. The relief which they seek by means of the motions consists of: (1) an Order requiring the prompt disclosure of all information responsive to specification one; (2) an Order requiring the prompt disclosure of all documents requested before June 10, 1974, which the FTC has agreed to voluntarily disclose and enjoining the FTC from requiring payment of a "search and segregation fee" for the production of such documents; and (3) an Order requiring the production for in camera inspection by the Court of all documents responsive to specifications two through five. The defendants have filed a cross-motion for summary judgment, urging that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that they are entitled to a judgment of dismissal as a matter of Law. The Court has heard oral argument on the motions, and the issues have been fully briefed by the parties.

The Identity of Knowlegeable Persons and the § 552(b)(7) Exemption -

The first specification requests production of all of the FTC's "records setting forth" the names and locations of persons having knowledge of the allegations set forth in the administrative complaint. The request might conceivably be construed broadly to encompass written statements and the like which incidentally contain the names and locations of knowledgeable persons. From the outset, however, the parties have proceeded on the assumption that the plaintiffs seek to discover only the names and last known locations of all such persons, and the plaintiffs so state in their supporting brief in this Court.[1]

In refusing production of such a list the FTC relied on § 552(b)(7),

[1] The Court recognizes that the Freedom of Information Act requires only that government agencies disclose existing documents, and that it does not require agencies to create documents not previously in existence. The Court further recognizes that the Act, even as amended, is not intended to be a substitute for the normal discovery procedures employed in litigation. Thus, for example, the FOIA could not serve as the basis of an Order requiring the FTC to produce a list of the witnesses it intends to use in the administrative proceeding, since that would presumably require the creation of a document not in existence and its sole purpose would be to fulfill the needs of a party in litigation which are more properly met by discovery.

The request for a list of knowledgeable persons, to the extent that such a list does not already exist, borders on the impermissible document-generating situation, and it is unabashedly presented for the purposes of discovery in an ongoing proceeding. The issue it presents is a difficult one, for the limitation of the FOIA to documents already in existence is vital to prevent the Act from creating a whole new layer of bureaucracy. Moreover, it may be argued that the scope of discovery in administrative proceedings ought to be governed by the normal rules of discovery, subject to review on appeal from the final agency decision.

On the other hand, however, it is now clear that the FOIA is applicable to requests by litigants engaged in pending administrative proceedings. See Renegotiation Board v. Bannercraft Clothing Co., 415 U.S. 1, 19-20 (1974); Control Data Corp. v. FTC, No. 4-74-Civ. 25 (D. Minn. February 28, 1974). And amended § 552(b) provides that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided . . . after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." It would be within the Court's power to order the FTC to sift through its documents pertaining to the underlying administrative complaint and turn over to the plaintiffs all the documents containing the names and locations of knowledgeable persons, after having excised everything else. This tedious and time-consuming process would be wasteful for all concerned. The Court therefore has concluded that, under the circumstances of this case, it is which, at that time, exempted from the disclosure requirements of the FOIA "investigatory files compiled for law enforcement purposes except to the extent available by law to a party other than an agency. . . ." In their brief submitted to this Court the defendants have cited a plethora of cases standing for the propositions that the (b)(7) exemption is to be read literally, that its purpose is to assure that private parties do not indirectly obtain any earlier or greater access to investigatory files than they would obtain directly in litigation proceedings, and that once a court concludes that documents are "investigatory files compiled for law enforcement purposes," it must automatically deny disclosure under the FOIA. See, e.g., Center for National Policy Review v. Weinberger, 502 F.2d 370 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Rural Housing Alliance v. United States Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Weisberg v. U.S. Department of Justice, 489 F.2d 1195, 1202-03 (D.C. Cir. 1973)(en banc), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 993 (1974); B & C Tire Co. v. Internal Revenue Service, 376 F. Supp. 708, 713-14 (N.D. Ala. 1974); Williams v. Internal Revenue Service, 345 F. Supp. 591 (D. Del. 1972), aff'd per curiam, 479 F.2d 317 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1024 (1973).

However, § 552(b)(7) was radically amended by Public Law 93-502, effective February 18, 1975, and now provides for exemption of:

> (7) investigatory records compiled for law enforcement purposes, but only to the extent that the production of such records would (A) interfere with enforcement proceedings, (B) deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or an impartial adjudication, (C) constitute an unwarranted "invasion of personal privacy," (D) disclose the identity of a confidential source and, in the case of a record compiled by a criminal law enforcement authority in the course of a criminal investigation, . . . confidential information furnished only by the confidential source, (E) disclose investigative techniques and procedures, or (F) endanger the life or physical safety of law enforcement personnel . . . .

In N.L.R.B. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 43 U.S.L.W. 4491, 4501 (April 28, 1975), the Supreme Court held that an action involving the § 552(b)(7) exemption was controlled by the amended version of that section, notwithstanding the fact that the documents had originally been denied and the action had been commenced prior to the amendment of the Act. Therefore, the law to be applied in the present case is the amended version of exemption (b)(7). That version is very specific in setting forth the particular instances in which investigatory files may be withheld, and it contains no reference to the rights of a party in proper to disregard the form of the request and to require the agency to supply a simple list of knowledgeable persons and their last known locations. This requirement is not burdensome, since the initial list of names included in the agency's investigatory files can be compiled by clerical personnel having no special training in the law or in the particular case at hand.

For the purposes of the record, it should be noted that the FTC has not raised any objection to the request for a list of names on the ground that to require the production of such a list would require the creation of a document not yet in existence.

litigation with the agency. Indeed, the Supreme Court noted in Sears that:

> . . . [t]he legislative history clearly indicates that Congress disapproves of those cases, relied on by the General Counsel, . . . which relieve the Government of the obligation to show that disclosure of a particular investigatory file would contravene the purposes of Exemption 7 . . . .

Id. at 4501. Accordingly, in examining the FTC's claim of exemption under § 552(b)(7), the slate of caselaw precedent is wiped clean, and the Court must look to the words of the amended section.

Under the FTC's theory of exemption as presented in its brief, the only portion of amended § 552(b)(7) which could arguably be said to permit nondisclosure of the requested list of knowledgeable persons is § 552(b)(7)(D), which permits nondisclosure ". . . to the extent that the production of such records would . . . (D) disclose the identity of a confidential source . . ." (emphasis supplied). The narrow issue presented in relation to specification one, therefore, is whether disclosure of the full list of names of persons known to the FTC to have knowledge of matters in the administrative complaint would disclose the identity of confidential sources. The Court has concluded that, as a general rule, such a list would not have the prohibited effect. The list will undoubtedly be a long one, and the plaintiffs will have no way of knowing which persons on the list were confidential sources or, indeed, which persons on the list have even spoken to FTC investigators.

The recent Eighth Circuit decision in Brennan v. Engineered Products, Inc., 506 F.2d 299 (8th Cir. 1974), is highly instructive in this regard. The Court there upheld a pretrial claim of "informer privilege" in a Fair Labor Standards Act case in which the Secretary of Labor had refused to turn over a list of potential trial witnesses as well as pretrial investigative statements made by such persons. But the Court specifically noted that a defendant in a civil proceeding has the right to know the "names of those persons known to the plaintiff who [have] information concerning the issues," and further noted that from the beginning the Secretary had supplied such a list. Id. at 303 and n. 2. Thus, despite its great concern with and respect for the governmental privilege protecting confidential sources, the Court left no doubt that compiling a list of names of all those persons with knowledge of the underlying action is routine discovery in no way inconsistent with that privilege.

Accordingly the Court will grant the plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment, and will enter an Order requiring the defendants to produce a list of the names of those persons, known to the agency, who have knowledge of matters in the administrative complaint filed in FTC Docket No. 8940. The list shall include the names and the last known home and business addresses and telephone numbers of such persons. However, the Order will provide for the deletion of certain names. First, pursuant to the stipulation of the plaintiffs entered in their brief, the FTC need not include in the list the names of any of its staff, and need not include the names of persons who are currently employed by the plaintiffs. Second, the Court recognizes that there may be some rare instances in which the very inclusion of the name of a particular individual on even a long list will almost certainly indicate to the party seeking disclosure that the individual was an "informer." If the FTC has adequate grounds to support its conclusion that, with respect to any particular individual, inclusion on the list would disclose his status as a confidential source within the meaning of § 552(b)(7)(D), it may submit to the Court its reasons for so concluding, and the Court will consider in camera a motion to strike the name of such individual. The Court wishes to stress, however, that such instances will be truly extraordinary, and that it does not expect that such a request for deletion of names will be necessary in this case.

Documents Responsive to Specifications Two Through Five and Withheld Under Claim of the § 552(b)(5) Exemption -

The defendants have now indicated that there are approximately twenty documents being withheld pursuant to § 552(b)(5) despite their responsiveness to specifications two through five. Section 552(b)(5) provides that an agency need not disclose ". . . inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency . . . ."

In Control Data Corp. v. FTC, supra, at 3-4, this Court enumerated some of the basic principles governing the withholding of documents requested under the FOIA. The Court there noted that the FOIA requires disclosure of all governmental documents which fail to come within one of the nine exemptions of the Act, that the statutory exemptions are to be narrowly construed, that the district courts are empowered to conduct de novo review of an agency's claim of exemption, and that the burden is on the agency to prove the applicability of an exemption. The Control Data decision also set forth the initial standard by which a court is to judge a claim of exemption under § 552(b)(5):

> In [Environmental Protection Agency v.] Mink, [410 U.S. 73 (1973)] the Supreme Court approved of the dichotomy that had developed in cases under the FOIA between "materials reflecting deliberative or policy-making processes on the one hand, and purely factual, investigative matters on the others." 410 U.S. at 89. Under Mink, the former may be withheld, while the latter, the "purely factual," is not within the purview of (b)(5) and hence is not exempt from disclosure. Furthermore, if matters reflecting the deliberative processes and those of a factual nature both appear in a memorandum, the factual information must be disclosed if it is severable from the deliberative items. Ibid., 91; Vaughn v. Rosen, [484 F.2d 820, 825 (D.C. Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 977 (1974)].

Id. at 6.

The FTC contends that the twenty items which it is withholding reflect deliberative or policy-making processes, and contain no "clearly severable" factual portions. The standard imposed by the new Act is "reasonably severable," see § 552(b), and the plaintiffs are correct in their argument that a document reasonably capable of being edited must be released whether or not its components are "clearly" segregable. Semantic arguments aside, however, if the factual portions of the documents cannot reasonably be severed, the agency's legal conclusion that the documents need not be disclosed is unassailable.

Nevertheless, this Court must be independently satisfied that the agency's conclusion of non-severability is an accurate one. To support its conclusion, the FTC has submitted a synopsis which tends to indicate that the very nature of the documents proves their exempt status. It is true that the Supreme Court has indicated that, while an order requiring production for in camera inspection is proper under the FOIA, the granting of an in camera inspection should not be automatic. See Environmental Protection Agency v. Mink, supra, at 93. It is also true that some courts have indicated that a synopsis of withheld documents may be sufficient to permit the court to assess the validity of an agency's claim of exemption. See, e.g., Cuneo v. Schlesinger, 484 F.2d 1086, 1092 (D.C. Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 977 (1974); Vaughn v. Rosen, supra, at 824-27.

Nevertheless, it is always difficult for a court to make a factual determination about the contents of documents which it has not seen, and it is especially difficult when the court's experience with the type of document at issue has been limited. Moreover, there is merit to the plaintiffs' contention that it is highly improbable that none of the documents have factually severable portions. While the Court does not wish to become the permanent umpire in an ongoing dispute between two chronically bickering parties, Congress has entrusted it with the duty of assuring that the FOIA is fully complied with by agencies such as the FTC. Without an in camera inspection of the twenty withheld documents the Court cannot confidently conclude that the claim of exemption under § 552(b)(5) is a valid one. In short, the agency has failed to meet its burden of establishing the propriety of the claim of exemption. Accordingly, the motion for an Order of production for the purposes of an in camera inspection will be granted. The synopsis previously prepared by the FTC should be of great value in conducting that inspection.

The Validity of the "Search and Segregation" Fee as Applied to the Documents Requested by the Plaintiffs Prior to June 10, 1974 -

Section 552(a)(1) of Title 5 provides:

> Except to the extent that a person has actual and timely notice of the terms thereof, a person may not in any manner be required to resort to, or be adversely affected by, a matter required to be published in the Federal Register and not so published. For the purpose of this paragraph, matter reasonably available to the class of persons affected thereby is deemed published in the Federal Register when incorporated by reference therein with the approval of the Director of the Federal Register.

Section 552(a)(3) of the same title provides:

> . . . [E]ach agency, on request for identifiable records made in accordance with published rules stating the time, place, fees to the extent authorized by statute, and procedure to be followed, shall make the records promptly available to any person . . . .

The parties' battle over the $183.00 fee hinges on the juxtaposition of these two provisions.

The plaintiffs contend that, when the two provisions are read together, the FTC is prohibited from charging any fee for the production of documents unless the actual fee schedule has been published in the Federal Register, the fee schedule has been validly incorporated by reference in the Federal Register, or the party requesting the documents has actual notice of the fee schedule. Uncontroverted affidavits submitted by the plaintiffs establish that they did not have actual notice of the "search and segregation" fee before June 10, 1974. The record also shows that the fee schedule was not in fact published in the Federal Register, but that the FTC did publish in the Federal Register a rule purporting to incorporate by reference fees to be set in the future by the Secretary of the FTC. See 16 C.F.R. § 4.8(c) (1974).

The FTC contends that it has the power to require payment of the fee under one of two theories. First, it contends that the word "published" in § 552(a)(3) does not mean "published in the Federal Register" as stated in § 552(a)(1). Hence, says the FTC, the fee schedules were not required to be published or incorporated by reference in the Federal Register.

The Court recognizes that the use of the word "publish" in § 552(a)(3) is ambiguous,[2] and that the legislative history is not helpful in resolving the ambiguity. The Court also acknowledges that it might be logical to allow exaction of the fee without prior publication in the Federal Register since rules governing the amounts of fees are not of the type which people need to consult to plan their activities. However, the recent amendment of the FOIA provides in new § 552(a)(4)(A):

> . . . In order to carry out the provisions of this section, each agency shall promulgate regulations, pursuant to notice and receipt of public comment, specifying a uniform schedule of fees applicable to all constituent units of such agency. Such fees shall be > limited to reasonable standard charges for document search and duplication and provide for recovery of only the direct costs of such search and duplication . . . .

[2] There are clear instances within the FOIA itself where Congress used the word "publish" in a way which meant published elsewhere than in the Federal Register. For example, § 552(a)(2) requires that an agency make available statements of policy not published in the Federal Register unless the materials are "promptly published and copies offered for sale." The Court would have been inclined to defer to the agency's interpretation of the word "publish" in § 552(a)(3) had it not been for the recent amendment of the Act in which Congress indicated that the fees themselves were to be set only pursuant to notice and comment. See § 552(a)(4)(A), and the discussion thereof in text.

The requirement of "notice" and "comment" lend greater content to the word "publish" in § 552(a)(3). The Court concludes that, in using those words, Congress was referring to the process of rulemaking set forth in § 553(b), which specifically requires that the notice of proposed rulemaking be published in the Federal Register, and which impliedly indicates that the final rules themselves must be published in the same source. One searches the legislative history in vain for any indication that Congress believed that, in enacting § 552(a)(4)(A), it was changing the publication requirements for the setting of fees. Therefore, although the matter is not without some doubt, the Court concludes that Congress intended in § 552(a)(3) to require the publication of fees in the Federal Register. Cf. 31 U.S.C. § 483a, applied in Diapulse Corp. v. Food & Drug Administration, 500 F.2d 75 (2d Cir. 1974).

Second, the FTC contends that it has complied with the alternative mode of publication permitted by § 552(a)(1), which provides for incorporation by reference. The plaintiffs point out, however, that this provision for incorporation by reference was not strictly complied with, since the Secretary of the FTC did not seek or obtain the approval of the Director of the Federal Register for such incorporation. They stress that such approval is not a rubber stamp, as is evidenced by 1 C.F.R. § 51.4 (1974), setting forth the conditions necessary before the Director will approve incorporation by reference. While the Court is dubious that the plaintiffs have been in any way prejudiced by the FTC's failure to follow the strict requirement of incorporation by reference, the issue seems squarely controlled by the plain words of § 552(a)(1). The FTC did not comply with the technical requirements of publication in the Federal Register, and accordingly the provisions in its fee schedule cannot be enforced against the plaintiffs with respect to documents requested before they received actual notice of the fees on June 10, 1974. Accordingly, the Court will grant the plaintiffs' request for an Order prohibiting the collection of a "search and segregation" fee in the production of any document requested in the March 19, 1974, petition.

It follows from the foregoing that the defendants' motion for summary judgment will be denied.

BELTONE ELECTRONICS CORPORATION et al. v. F.T.C., et al.*

Civ. A. No. 75 C 1230. F.T.C. Docket No. 9014.

(United States District Court, Northern District of Illinois, E.D., September 10, 1975)

1. F.T.C. HAS AUTHORITY TO PREVENT UNFAIR OR DECEPTIVE ACTS OR PRACTICES INCLUDING DISSEMINATION OF FALSE ADVERTISEMENTS RELATING TO FOOD, DRUGS AND OTHER DEVICES.

Dissemination of false advertisements in commerce relating to food, drugs, and other devices is an unfair or deceptive act or practice which Federal Trade Commission has authority to prevent under Federal Trade Commission Act.

2. IN ORDER TO ENFORCE MANDATE OF F.T.C. ACT, F.T.C. HAS BROAD AUTHORITY TO CONDUCT INVESTIGATIONS.

Federal Trade Commission has broad authority to conduct investigations concerning conduct and practices of corporations in order to enforce mandates of Federal Trade Commission Act.

3. IF VIOLATIONS OF F.T.C. ACT ARE ESTABLISHED, F.T.C. IS INVESTED WITH POWER TO ISSUE CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS.

Power is invested in Federal Trade Commission to issue cease and desist orders if violations of Federal Trade Commission Act are established.

4. PURSUANT TO F.T.C. ACT, F.T.C. HAS EXPLICIT AUTHORITY TO PROMULGATE TRADE REGULATION RULES.

In addition to its broad investigatory and adjudicatory powers, Federal Trade Commission has explicit authority to promulgate trade regulation rules pursuant to Federal Trade Commission Act.

5. EXCLUSIVE RULE-MAKING AUTHORITY OF F.T.C. ARE SET OUT IN PROCEDURES IN F.T.C. ACT.

[591] Procedures set out in Federal Trade Commission Act are exclusive rule-making authority of Federal Trade Commission.

6. A.P.A. MANDATES GOVERNING NOTICE DID NOT APPLY TO PETITION BEFORE F.T.C.; NO PROCEEDING WAS PENDING UNTIL A COMPLAINT WAS FILED.

Mandates of Administrative Procedure Act respecting notice did not apply to petition before Federal Trade Commission wherein plaintiff sought to hold proposed complaint in abeyance where, under a practice which was later discontinued, Commission tendered to plaintiffs a complaint which it intended to file in future and, until complaint was filed, no proceeding was pending.

7. F.T.C. INITIATION OF RULE-MAKING PROCEEDING AT PLAINTIFFS' REQUEST RENDERED PORTION OF PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT MOOT.

Portion of complaint wherein plaintiffs sought initiation of a proceeding before Federal Trade Commission for promulgation of an industrywide rule was moot where Commission subsequently honored plaintiffs' request by initiating a rule-making proceeding.

8. COURTS MAY BYPASS ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES IF AGENCY HAS CLEARLY VIOLATED A STATUTORY OR REGULATORY RIGHT; ISSUE IS STRICTLY LEGAL IN NATURE NOT INVOLVING AGENCY EXPERTISE OR IF JUDICIAL REVIEW IS PRECLUDED IN LATER AGENCY ORDER.

Courts will ordinarily not interfere with an agency until it has completed its action; but administrative remedies may be bypassed if agency has clearly violated a right secured by statute or agency regulation, issue involved is a strictly legal one not involving agency's expertise or any factual determinations, or issue cannot be raised upon judicial review of a later order of agency.

* Reported in 402 F.Supp. 590 (1975). For case before the Commission, see 88 F.T.C. 335.

9. BECAUSE F.T.C. ACTION WAS DISCRETIONARY, STANDING ALONE, IT WAS NOT REVIEWABLE BEFORE CONCLUSION OF ADJUDICATORY PROCEEDINGS.

Action of Federal Trade Commission in issuing complaint against corporate plaintiff and five other manufacturers with regard to alleged ommissions in hearing aid advertising that were industrywide was discretionary and, standing alone, was not reviewable short of review at conclusion of adjudicatory proceedings.

10. F.T.C. ACTION WAS NOT ARBITRARY OR CAPRICIOUS AND DID NOT WARRANT COLLATERAL JUDICIAL INTERVENTION.

Fact that Federal Trade Commission had proceeded against only corporate plaintiff and five other manufacturers with regard to alleged omissions in hearing aid advertising that were industrywide did not constitute such arbitrary and capricious action on part of Commission as to warrant collateral judicial intervention.

11. RELIEF SOUGHT, AFFIRMATIVE DISCLOSURE OF NEGATIVE ASPECTS OF PRODUCTS, WAS NOT ARBITRARY AND CAPRICIOUS: COLLATERAL JUDICIAL INTERVENTION WAS NOT WARRANTED.

Nature of relief which Federal Trade Commission sought against corporate plaintiff and five other manufacturers, namely, affirmative disclosures of negative aspects of their products in their advertising, was not so arbitrary and capricious as to warrant collateral judicial intervention in proceedings before Commission.

12. PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT THAT F.T.C. SINGLED THEM OUT ON A NEW ISSUE COULD ONLY BE REVIEWED AT CONCLUSION OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDINGS, IF AT ALL.

Complaint that corporate plaintiff had, along with others comprising 40% of hearing aid market, been singled out for prosecution by Federal Trade Commission on a new issue raised at best a question of Commission discretion which, if reviewable at all, could only be reviewed upon completion of administrative proceedings.

13. F.T.C. CONCURRENT USE OF AUTHORITY TO CONDUCT ADJUDICATIVE PROCEEDINGS AND PROMULGATE TRADE REGULATION RULES IS NOT IMPROPER.

Congress has specifically authorized Federal Trade Commission to conduct adjudicative proceedings and to promulgate trade regulation rules, and there is nothing improper in Commission's concurrent use of both procedures, even if they appear to have a common objective.

14. F.T.C. CONDUCT, SEEKING TO AVOID A MULTIPLICITY OF ACTIONS, WAS TO BE COMMENDED, NOT CHARACTERIZED AS ARBITRARY AND CAPRICIOUS.

[592] Conduct of Federal Trade Commission in avoiding a multiplicity of actions by determining to adjudicate false advertising charges against corporate plaintiff as well as charges of alleged nondisclosure was to be commended rather than characterized as arbitrary and capricious so as to warrant judicial intervention.

15. THOUGH F.T.C. PROCEEDED AGAINST ENTIRE HEARING AID INDUSTRY THROUGH TRADE REGULATION RULE PROCEEDING AND PROCEEDED AGAINST CERTAIN NUMBERS OF INDUSTRY ON IDENTICAL QUESTION THROUGH INDIVIDUAL ADJUDICATION, JUDICIAL REVIEW WAS NOT WARRANTED.

Though Federal Trade Commission had taken a stance against entire hearing aid industry as evidenced by its proposed rule, while it proceeded on identical question against corporate plaintiff and five other manufacturers by way of individual adjudication, judicial intervention was not warranted, where vice, if any, was that proposed rule and proposed order against plaintiff were in all essential respects identical when it came to disclosures and, in event Commission entered an arbitrary order against plaintiff at conclusion of administrative proceeding plaintiff could obtain direct review of order.

16. ADOPTION OF TRADE REGULATION RULE REQUIRES F.T.C. TO PUBLISH PROPOSED RULE AND REASONING THEREFOR IN FEDERAL REGISTER, INFORMAL HEARINGS, SUBMISSION OF WRITTEN VIEWS, DATA, AND ARGUMENTS BY INTERESTED PARTIES, AND PROMULGATION OF FINAL RULE TOGETHER WITH STATEMENT OF RULE'S BASIS AND PURPOSE.

When Federal Trade Commission decides to adopt a trade regulation rule, it must comply with procedure set out in Federal Trade Commission Act, including publication of proposed rule and reasons therefor in Federal Register, informal hearings, submission of written data, views, and arguments by interested persons, and promulgation of a final rule based on rule-making record together with a statement of rule's basis and purpose.

17. THE MOST DESIRABLE MEANS TO OBTAIN BROAD OBJECTIVES OF F.T.C. ACT IS THE RULE MAKING PROCESS.

Rule making is a most desirable means of obtaining the broad objectives of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

18. RULE MAKING AUTHORITY DOES NOT DIMINISH F.T.C.'S AUTHORITY TO PROCEED ON CASE-BY-CASE BASIS IN APPROPRIATE CIRCUMSTANCES.

Provision of Federal Trade Commission Act prescribing procedure to be followed by Federal Trade Commission when it exercises its rule-making authority does not diminish authority of Commission to proceed on a case-by-case basis in appropriate circumstances and to deal with fact situations that may result in decisions which articulate general standards of conduct.

19. RECORD FAILED TO ESTABLISH F.T.C.'S ACTION WARRANTED PREHEARING COLLATERAL JUDICIAL INTERFERENCE.

Record failed to establish that circumstances were so inappropriate as to warrant prehearing collateral judicial interference with decision of Federal Trade Commission to initiate adjudicatory proceedings against plaintiff and five other manufacturers with regard to alleged advertising omissions that were industry-wide.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 402 F.Supp. 590.)

On motion of plaintiffs for preliminary relief, and alternative motions of defendants for dismissal or summary judgment, court held that F.T.C.'s decision to issue complaint was discretionary and not reviewable pending conclusion of adjudicatory proceedings; relief sought was not arbitrary and capricious warranting collateral judicial intervention; and F.T.C.'s exercise of its rule-making authority did not diminish its authority to proceed on a case by case basis in appropriate circumstances.

Motion of plaintiffs for preliminary injunction denied; alternative motion of defendants for dismissal granted.

MEMORANDUM DECISION

MARSHALL, District Judge.

By this action the plaintiffs, Beltone Electronics Corporation and its present and former officers and directors, Sam Rosen, David H. Barnow and Chester K. Barnow (hereinafter collectively "Beltone") seek a declaratory judgment that the defendants, Federal Trade Commission and its Commissioners (hereinafter either "FTC" or the "Commission") [593] have acted and are proceeding against Beltone in an unlawful manner and preliminary and permanent injunctive relief in implementation of the requested declaratory judgment. The plaintiffs assert that their claims arise under the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 41 et seq. (Supp. Feb. 1975),[1] the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 551-559 and 701-706, and the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and that the matter in controversy exceeds $10,000 exclusive of interest and costs (measured by the alleged injury to Beltone's extensive business operations). Accordingly, jurisdiction and venue are said to be here under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331(a), 1357 and 2201, 2202 and 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e). The defendants do not question venue and their attack on jurisdiction is limited to the assertion that it is wanting because the plaintiffs have failed to exhaust their administrative remedies.

The plaintiffs have moved for a preliminary injunction pursuant to Rule 65, Fed.R.Civ.P., to restrain the defendants and staff from proceeding upon an adjudicative administrative complaint and proposed order which the Commission issued against Beltone on March 5, 1975. By their briefs the plaintiffs have limited the preliminary relief they seek to those portions of the Commission's complaint and proposed order which, if sustained, would require Beltone to make certain affirmative disclosures in its advertising.

The defendants, while opposing the plaintiffs' motion for preliminary relief, have countered with alternative motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted or summary judgment. Rules 12(b)(1) and (6) and 56, Fed.R.Civ.P.

The parties appear to agree that there are no contested material issues of fact. What is presented is a purely legal question: When and under what conditions may a district court interfere with a proceeding pending before the FTC. However, to the extent required by Rules 52(a) and 65(d), Fed.R.Civ.P., the following shall constitute findings of fact as well as conclusions of law and reasons for the decision here rendered.

[1-5] Under the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Commission has the authority to prevent "unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce." 15 U.S.C.A. § 45(a)(1), (6) (Supp. Feb. 1975). The dissemination of false advertisements in commerce relating to food, drugs, and other devices is an unfair or deceptive act or practice. 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 52, 55(a)(1) (Supp. Feb. 1975). To enforce the mandate of the Act, the Commission has broad authority to conduct investigations concerning the conduct and practices of corporations, 15 U.S.C.A. § 46(a) (Supp. Feb. 1975), and the power to issue cease and desist orders if violations are established. 15 U.S.C.A. § 45(b) (Supp. Feb. 1975). In addition to its broad investigatory and adjudicatory powers, the Commission has explicit authority to promulgate Trade Regulation Rules. 15 U.S.C.A. § 57a (Supp. Feb. 1975). The procedures set out in Section 57a are the exclusive rule making authority of the FTC.

Beltone is an Illinois corporation with its principal place of business in Chicago. It manufactures hearing aids which are then sold to independent dealers. There are approximately 60 manufacturers or importers of hearing aids in the United States. In 1972, the FTC, pursuant to its advertising substantiation program ordered Beltone and 13 other manufacturers to provide factual substantiation for certain of their advertising claims. 15 U.S.C.A. § 46(b) (Supp. Feb. 1975), amending 15 U.S.C. § 46(b) (1970). Beltone filed its report with the Commission on September 22, 1972.

[594] On May 7, 1974, the FTC notified Beltone that "the Commission has determined to institute a formal proceeding" against Beltone. The notice was accompanied by a proposed complaint which alleged misrepresentations and failures to make certain affirmative disclosures in Beltone's advertisements. Five other hearing aid manufacturers, which, together with Beltone, comprise 40% of the market, were served with similar complaints.

On May 22, 1974, shortly after Beltone had received notice of the proposed complaint against it, the Commission announced that it was conducting an > industry-wide investigation to determine whether manufacturers, promoters, renters or sellers of hearing aids have been or are falsely advertising their products or using unfair or deceptive acts or practices in marketing them.[2]

On October 24, 1974, Beltone and four other manufacturers[3] that had been served with the proposed complaints presented to the Commission their "Petition for Rule Making and Request to Hold Proposed Complaints in Abeyance" in which they urged the Commission to proceeding to rule making to develop standards of affirmative disclosures if they were in fact necessary. While that petition was before the Commission, amendments to the Federal Trade Commission Act dealing with rule making became effective. Pub.L. No. 93-637 (Jan. 8, 1975). On January 10, 1975, the Commission denied the petition without any statement of the grounds for the denial: One week later Beltone and the other four manufacturers filed a "Petition for Reconsideration . . ." which was denied on March 5, 1975, again without any statement of the grounds for the denial. On the same date the Commission issued formal complaints and proposed orders against six manufacturers.[4] It is the complaint and proposed order issued against Beltone that is the focal point of the controversy here.

[2] FTC News Release, May 22, 1974.

[3] Seeburg Industries, Inc., Textron, Inc., Radioear Corporation and Dahlberg Electronics, Inc.

The complaint issued against Beltone asserts two theories of deceptive practices in advertising. The first is misrepresentations that relate specifically to hearing aids manufactured and distributed by Beltone. For example, many of Beltone's advertisements are alleged to represent either explicitly or implicitly that its hearing aids are new, unique, or superior to others in the market. The complaint alleges that Beltone's hearing aids are not new, unique or superior and it seeks a cease and desist order in respect to such representations. Plaintiffs do not challenge the authority of the Commission to proceed on those allegations.

The second and controversial theory of the Commission's complaint is the alleged need to make affirmative disclosures in advertising about any hearing aid. No manufacturer or seller of hearing aids presently makes such disclosures.

In Paragraph Nine of its complaint the Commission alleges as "truth and in fact":

* * * * * * *

> 3. Many persons with a hearing loss will not receive any significant benefit from any hearing aid.
> 4. Many persons with a hearing loss will not be able to consistently distinguish and understand speech sounds in noisy or group situations by using any hearing aid.
> [595] 5. In many instances, persons who hear but do not understand have a discrimination problem that cannot be helped by any hearing aid.
> 6. No hearing aid will restore natural hearing to the wearers thereof nor will it enable such persons to hear sounds naturally. (All emphasis supplied.)

And in Paragraph Thirteen it alleges:

[4] Prior to the filing of this lawsuit the FTC followed the practice of issuing "proposed" complaints and orders. While the complaints were in this state the parties could attempt to negotiate a settlement and thus avoid litigation. If, however, an agreement could not be reached, the Commission would issue a formal complaint. This practice has recently been abandoned. Under current procedures a formal complaint is issued in the first instance; nevertheless, the parties shall have an opportunity to enter into settlement. 40 Fed.Reg. 15235 (Apr. 4, 1975).

> The following statement constitutes a material fact with respect to the making of any claim regarding the hearing capabilities or hearing quality of any hearing aid:
> Many persons with a hearing loss will not receive any significant benefit from any hearing aid. (Emphasis supplied.)

The Commission asserts that these alleged facts are material and that failure to disclose them renders Beltone's advertising false and thus an unfair and deceptive act or practice.

On the basis of these alleged facts and certain representations which Beltone allegedly makes in its advertising regarding the beneficial effect of its hearing aids and their ability to enable the wearer to distinguish speech sounds in noisy or group situations and to understand that which they hear and to hear "naturally," the Commission seeks an order prohibiting Beltone from disseminating any advertisement which represents directly or by implication, that:

> [Beltone's] hearing aids will be beneficial to persons with a hearing loss, unless in immediate conjunction therewith it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed that many persons with a hearing loss will not receive any significant benefit from any hearing aid.
> Use of [Beltone's] hearing aids will enable persons with a hearing loss to distinguish or understand speech sounds in noisy situations, unless in immediate conjunction therewith it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed that many persons with a hearing loss will not be able to consistently distinguish and understand speech sounds in noisy situations by using any hearing aid.
> Use of [Beltone's] hearing aids will enable persons with a hearing loss to distinguish or understand speech sounds in group situations, unless in immediate conjunction therewith it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed that many persons with a hearing loss will not be able to consistently distinguish and understand speech sounds in group situations by using any hearing aid.
> Makes any representation, directly or by implication, that any hearing aid may or will affect hearing capability or hearing quality unless the advertisement clearly and conspicuously discloses in the exact language . . . that: Many persons with a hearing loss will not receive any significant benefit from any hearing aid.[5]

The Commission's complaint against Beltone was referred to an administrative law judge for hearings. Beltone answered, on April 10, denying the material allegations of the complaint. Such was the posture of the matter before the Commission when the plaintiffs commenced this action on April 18.

The plaintiffs' complaint is in three counts, all of which are based on the foregoing facts. Count I asserts that the "institution [by the Commission] of adjudicative proceedings . . . to compel Beltone and only a few other manufacturers to make [disclosure] statements in their advertising which . . . are necessarily applicable to all hearing aid advertising, is arbitrary and capricious . . . and violates plaintiffs' Constitutional right to due process of law." Complaint ¶ 15. Count I also asserts that Beltone would be irreparably injured if it were forced to defend itself in a rule making proceeding aris[956]ing out of the Commission's industrywide investigation while at the same time defending itself in the individual adjudicatory proceeding. Complaint ¶ 16. Count II asserts that "[t]he Commission's notices of denial of [Beltone's Petition for Rule Making and Request to Hold Proposed Complaints in Abeyance] and the Petition for Reconsideration violated the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 555(e) . . . ." Complaint ¶ 19. Count III asserts that "[t]he Commission, although designating its proceeding 'adjudicative,' is in fact and in law engaged in 'rule making,' as that term is defined in the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 551(5) . . . [contrary to its] authority to engage in rule making . . . set forth in Section 18 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as added by Section 202 of the . . . Federal Trade Commission Improvement Act, Pub.L. No. 93-637, § 202 . . . ." Complaint ¶¶ 21, 22.

[5] Administrative Complaint No. 9014, Order, Part I, 1(a)(4)-(6), 1(b). All emphasis supplied.

All of the briefs of the parties on all of the pending motions were filed prior to June 24, 1975. On that date the Commission published in the Federal Register a notice of the initiation of a "proceeding for the promulgation of a Trade Regulation Rule for the Hearing Aid Industry." 40 Fed.Reg. 26646 (June 24, 1975). The notice was accompanied by the proposed rule. Id. 26646, et seq.

The proposed rule covers matters other than disclosures in advertising.[6] But there are disclosure provisions in the rule which virtually track the proposed order against Beltone. Thus Section 440.10(a)-(c) prohibits the dissemination of any advertisement:

> (a) Which makes any general or specific representation that a hearing aid will or has the capacity to affect hearing capability or hearing quality, unless it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed that many persons with a hearing loss will not receive any significant benefit from any hearing aid; Provided, however, that nothing herein shall prohibit a truthful representation that hearing aids can help many persons with a hearing loss.
> (b) Which makes any representation that a hearing aid will enable a person with a hearing loss to distinguish or understand speech sounds in noisy situations, unless, in addition to the disclosure required by § 440.10(a), it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed that many persons with a hearing loss will not be able to consistently distinguish and understand speech sounds in noisy situations by using any hearing aid. (c) Which makes any representation that a hearing aid will enable a person with a hearing loss to distinguish or understand speech sounds in group situations, unless, and in addition to the disclosure required by § 440.10(a), it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed that many persons with a hearing loss will not be able to consistently distinguish and understand speech sounds in group situations by using any hearing aid.

Although the proposed rule was published and the proceedings attendant it were initiated subsequent to the commencement of this action, there is no reason why it should not be judicially noticed and considered in ruling on the pending motions. Indeed, the proposed rule sharpens the issues under Counts I and III of the plaintiffs' complaint and moots whatever vitality there was to Count II.

Turning first to Count II, the plaintiffs complain of the Commission's failure to give any statement of the grounds for its denials of Beltone's "Petition for Rule Making and Request to Hold Proposed Complaint in Abeyance" and its "Petition for Reconsideration . . ." contending that the reasonless denials violated Section 6(e) of the Ad[597]ministrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 555(e) (1970) which provides:

[6] Thus, one section of the rule requires that dealers provide consumers with a right to cancel purchases of hearing aids should they be dissatisfied with their performance.

> Prompt notice shall be given of the denial in whole or in part of a . . . petition . . . of an interested person made in connection with any agency proceeding. Except in affirming a prior denial or when the denial is self-explanatory, the notice shall be accompanied by a brief statement of the grounds for denial.

They rely on Natural Resources Defense Counsel, Inc. v. S. E. C., 389 F.Supp. 689, at 700 (D.D.C.1974), in which the court held that the SEC's denial of a petition for rule making required a statement of grounds under Section 6(e).

For their part, defendants contend in respect to Count II that no "agency proceeding" was pending within the meaning of Section 6(e) so that its mandate did not apply to the initial Petition or the Petition for Reconsideration.

[6] To the extent that the petitions sought to have the proposed complaint "held in abeyance," the defendants' position is sound. On May 7, 1974, under a practice which has now been discontinued (see, note 4, supra), the Commission tendered to Beltone and others a complaint which it intended to file in the future. Until the complaint was filed no proceeding was pending. In effect this aspect of Beltone's petition sought a continuance or postponement of a proceeding which had not then commenced.

[7] Insofar as the Petition and the Petition for Reconsideration sought the initiation of a rule making proceeding, they have now been honored. Thus, without agreeing or disagreeing with the decision in Natural Resources Defense Counsel, Inc., supra, this aspect of the claim presented in Count II of the complaint is moot.

The contentions advanced by Counts I and III and the plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction are not so easily disposed of. There the plaintiffs seek to be relieved of the burden of defending against the disclosure allegations of the complaint on the grounds that it is arbitrary and capricious for the Commission to single out only Beltone and five other manufacturers with regard to alleged advertising omissions which are industry wide and that the Commission is really engaged in rule making under the guise of adjudicating the complaint, contrary to the provisions of newly enacted Section 18 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. To those two grounds a third can now be added: that it is unfair to require Beltone simultaneously to respond individually to the disclosure allegations of the complaint and, as a part of the industry, to the proposed rule, when it is clear that the former will be subsumed by the latter if it is adopted.

At the threshold of these contentions is the defendants' assertion that these are issues reviewable only after the completion of the Commission's adjudicatory proceeding against Beltone and then by an appropriate court of appeals and not this court. 15 U.S.C. § 45(c) (1970).

[8] Both sides agree that as a general rule a party is not entitled to judicial review of a supposed or threatened administrative injury until the prescribed administrative remedy has been exhausted. Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U.S. 41, 50-51, 58 S.Ct. 459, 82 L.Ed. 638 (1938); Borden v. F. T. C., 495 F.2d 785, 786 (7th Cir. 1974); Jewel Companies v. F. T. C., 432 F.2d 1155, 1156-57 (7th Cir. 1970). There are, however, a number of well established exceptions to the exhaustion requirement. Thus, as the Court of Appeals for this Circuit held in the leading case of Borden v. F. T. C., supra:

> It is well settled that ordinarily courts will not interfere with an agency until it has completed its action and that administrative remedies may be bypassed only if (1) the agency has clearly violated a right secured by statute or agency regulation, Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184, 188-89, 79 S.Ct. 180, 3 L.Ed.2d 210 (1958); Elmo Division of Drive-X Company v. Dixon, 121 U.S.App.D.C. 113, 348 F.2d 342, [598] 346-347 (1965); (2) the issue involved is a strictly legal one not involving the agency's expertise or any factual determinations, Jewel Companies, Inc. v. F. T. C., 432 F.2d 1155, 1159 (7 Cir. 1970); McKart v. United States, 395 U.S. 185, 197-199, 89 S.Ct. 1657, 23 L.Ed.2d 194 (1969); or (3) the issue cannot be raised upon judicial review of a later order of the agency, Jewel, supra, at 1159.[7]

It is with these exceptions in mind that Counts I and III of the plaintiffs' complaint must be judged.

[9,10] Of course, the Commission's action in issuing the complaint against Beltone is discretionary and, standing alone, is not reviewable short of review at the conclusion of the adjudicatory proceeding. F. T. C. v. Universal-Rundle Corp., 387 U.S. 244, 249-250, 87 S.Ct. 1622, 18 L.Ed.2d 749 (1967); Ostler Candy Co. v. F. T. C., 106 F.2d 962, 965 (10th Cir. 1939), cert. den., 309 U.S. 675, 60 S.Ct. 713, 84 L.Ed. 1020 (1940); Miles Laboratories v. F. T. C., 50 F.Supp. 434, 437-38 (D.C.1943), aff'd, 78 U.S.App.D.C. 326, 140 F.2d 683 (1944), cert. den., 322 U.S. 752, 64 S.Ct. 1263, 88 L.Ed. 1582. And the fact that the Commission has proceeded against only Beltone and five other manufacturers does not constitute action so arbitrary and capricious as to warrant collateral judicial intervention such as is sought here. In Universal-Rundle, supra, the Supreme Court held that even if an entire industry was engaged in an illegal course of conduct, the Commission had the authority to proceed against only one member of the industry. And while the Court went on to say that the Commission does not have the unbridled power to institute a proceeding which arbitrarily destroys one of many law violators in a particular industry (387 U.S. at 251, 87 S.Ct. 1622), that is not this case. Here the six against whom the [7] 495 F.2d at 786-87. A fourth exception to the exhaustion doctrine may be where agency action unduly interferes with the conduct of foreign relations. McCulloch v. Sociedad Nacional de Marineros de Honduras, 372 U.S. 10, 83 S.Ct. 671, 9 L.Ed.2d 547 (1963).

Commission has proceeded comprise 40% of the market. Thus, as in Moog Industries v. F. T. C., 355 U.S. 411, 413, 78 S.Ct. 377, 2 L.Ed.2d 370 (1957), "Whether all firms in the industry should be dealt with in a single proceeding or should receive individualized treatment are questions that call for discretionary determination by the [Commission]."

[11] Nor does the nature of the relief which the Commission seeks against Beltone and the other five alter this conclusion. While requirements that manufacturers and sellers of products make affirmative disclosures of negative aspects of their products in their advertising are of fairly recent origin, their premises are not novel. The jurisprudence of the vendor's duty to disclose and misrepresentation by omission runs deep in the common law. The Commission has successfully urged it under the Federal Trade Commission Act in adjudicatory proceedings involving individual products, see, J. B. Williams v. F. T. C., 381 F.2d 884 (6th Cir. 1967) (Geritol); Keele Hair and Scalp Specialists v. F. T. C., 275 F.2d 18 (5th Cir. 1960) and Erickson v. F. T. C., 272 F.2d 318 (7th Cir. 1959) (anti-baldness products), and has embraced it on an industry wide basis by way of a Trade Regulation Rule. See, F. T. C. Proposed Trade Regulation Rule on Unfair or Deceptive Advertising or Labeling of Cigarettes in Relation to Health Hazards of Smoking, 29 Fed.Reg. 8324 (1964). This case appears to present a third approach. The Commission has elected to proceed against some but not all of the members of an industry in respect to alleged failures to disclose which the respondents assert are industry-wide shortcomings. That does not render the proceedings arbitrary, for our experience teaches that, on occasion, a case by case approach to a particular type of conduct has advantages over immediate legislative prohibition or regulation.

[599] [12] In short, then, the plaintiffs' complaint that Beltone has along with others comprising 40% of the hearing aid market, been singled out for prosecution on a new issue raises at best a question of Commission discretion which, if reviewable at all, can be reviewed only under the statute, 15 U.S.C. § 45(c) (1970), upon completion of the administrative proceedings.

[13] The pendency of simultaneous proceedings does not strengthen the plaintiffs' position. By Sections 5 and 18 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, Congress has specifically authorized the Commission to conduct adjudicative proceedings and to promulgate Trade Regulation Rules. 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 45, 57a (Supp. Feb. 1975). There is nothing improper in the Commission's concurrent use of the two procedures, Lehigh Portland Cement Co. v. F. T. C., 291 F.Supp. 628, 632 (E.D.Va.1968), aff'd, 416 F.2d 971 (4th Cir. 1969), even if, as here, they appear to have a common objective.

Beltone has been called to book by the Commission in respect to alleged false advertising apart from the question of non-disclosure. Those alleged violations should be heard promptly, and the plaintiffs concede as much for they do not challenge the authority of the Commission to proceed upon them.

[14] Having brought the false advertising charges against Beltone, the Commission has also alleged non-disclosure to the end that all of the allegations can be adjudicated in a single proceeding. Certainly avoidance of a multiplicity of actions is to be commended and not castigated as arbitrary and capricious.

Should the plaintiffs prevail here on the timing of the Commission trial of the issues of non-disclosure, one of two equally undesirable results would ensue. Two adjudicatory proceedings could result—one of the false advertising claims, the other to enforce the proposed rule when it becomes final. Or, the trial of the false advertising claims could await the trial on enforcement of the proposed rule, again when it becomes final. It is not amiss to note in this context that the rule proceedings may move slowly.

Marco Sales, supra, upon which the plaintiffs heavily rely, is not analogous to the situation here. In the first place, Marco was a direct review of final agency action. In that action the Commission ordered Marco to cease and desist the operation of a punch card lottery. In 1969, some 18 months before the cease and desist order was issued, the Commission had promulgated strict rules regulating similar lotteries, but did not ban them. The Commission attempted to justify the disparate treatment given Marco and the industry generally by relying on Moog and Universal-Rundle. The court rejected the argument.

> Both of these cases involve adjudicatory proceedings and stand for the proposition that even if all the petitioner's competitors were engaged in the same practice, it is no defense to the petitioner that the cease and desist order is directed to him alone. Obviously, the Commission cannot be expected to bring simultaneous proceedings against all of those engaged in identical practices. These cases would be in point if Marco were urging that others engaged in identical practices competing with him, were not similarly pursued by the Commission. Petitioners do not so argue. They argue rather that those engaged in the same activity are regulated while Marco is annihilated. In short, it is not that the Commission has failed to act against others but that it has adopted a positive regulatory approach to them totally inconsistent with its approach toward the petitioners.
> The arbitrary character of the Commission's action here consists of its total failure to even advert to, much less explain, its reason for the rigid ad hoc adjudicatory stance it adopted toward the petitioner and the flexible tolerance its industry regulations dis[600]played to those utilizing the same or similar devices. 453 F.2d at 6.

[15] Clearly the abuse of discretion found in Marco is distinguishable from the agency action challenged here. True there is the parallel that the FTC has taken a stance against the entire hearing aid industry as evidenced by its proposed rule, while it proceeds on the identical question against Beltone and five others by way of individual adjudication. But the vice in Marco was that the individual order to cease and desist was far more severe than the general rule. It was inconsistency in the name of individualized treatment that the court rejected. Here the vice, if it be one, is that the proposed rule and the proposed order against Beltone are in all essential respects identical when it comes to disclosures. Furthermore, as in Marco, should the Commission enter an arbitrary order against Beltone at the conclusion of the administrative proceeding, Beltone may obtain direct review of it.

Accordingly, the plaintiffs' complaint that Beltone is being called upon to respond in simultaneous proceedings again raises nothing more than a question of Commission discretion which cannot be reviewed in these collateral proceedings.

There remains Count III of the plaintiffs' complaint which asserts that the adjudicatory proceeding against Beltone is in fact a rule making proceeding being conducted in violation of the Administrative Procedure and the Federal Trade Commission Acts.

> (a)(1) The Commission may prescribe—
> (A) interpretive rules and general statements of policy with respect to unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce . . ., and
> (B) rules which define with specificity acts or practices which are unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce. . . .
> (2) The Commission shall have no authority under this chapter, other than its authority under this section, to prescribe any rule with respect to unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce. . . . .

When the Commission decides to adopt a Trade Regulation Rule under (a)(1), it must comply with the procedures set out in subsection (b), which include publication of the proposed rule and the reasons therefor in the Federal Register, informal hearings, the submission of written data, views, and arguments by interested persons, and the promulgation of a final rule based on the rule making record together with a statement of the rule's basis and purpose.

[17] The Commission's authority to prescribe Trade Regulation Rules is limited to the procedures delineated in Section 18. This fact was stressed in the House Report on the bill.

> Section 202 replaces the existing rulemaking authority of the FTC under section 6(g) of the Act with a new section 18 which authorizes the FTC to issue rules defining with specificity the acts or practices which are unfair or deceptive and which are within the scope of section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act. . . . This rulemaking > authority would be the exclusive substantive rulemaking authority of the FTC under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

H.R.Rep.No. 93-1107, 93d Cong.2d Sess. 1974, 1974 U.S.Code Cong. & Adm. News, p. 7727.[8] In limiting the rulemaking au[601]thority of the FTC, Congress expressed the view that rule making was the most desirable means of obtaining the broad objectives of the Act.

> Substantial sentiment has developed over the years that in many instances the desirable manner of implementing the broad standards of Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act should be by means of rule-making with the complaint-cease and desist order procedure used as a means of enforcing the rules. Rule-making offers the obvious advantages that (a) each person who could be affected by the proposed rule is afforded an opportunity to be heard on it in a well defined and well understood procedure, (b) the rules are developed in advance of their application to any person or practice and apply with uniformity, and (c) judicial review of any rule is available as well as of the procedures used in adopting it. Id. at 7714.

In this regard, Congress echoed the sentiment of the FTC itself. When it proposed its rule regarding disclosure of the health hazards of smoking cigarettes it said:

> A rulemaking proceeding affords an economical method of consolidating common issues of fact and law in a streamlined, but comprehensive and fair, proceeding having few of the cumbersome attributes of litigation. Such a proceeding does not present questions of assessing individual guilt or innocence for past conduct, the strict procedural and evidentiary requirements of litigation are inapplicable.
> [Adjudicative proceedings would be inequitable since] the principal considerations . . . pertain more or less equally to all of the cigarette manufacturers, who are, of course, competitors. The situation plainly calls for uniform consolidated treatment, not separate lawsuits. 29 Fed. Reg. at 8368-69 (1964).

Furthermore, the Supreme Court has recognized a general policy preference in favor of rule making. In S. E. C. v. Chenery Corp., 332 U.S. 194, 67 S.Ct. 1575, 91 L.Ed. 1995 (1947), the Court considered the power of the SEC to formulate new rules of conduct in an adjudicatory proceeding. It stated that since an agency has the power to make rules prospectively through its rule making power it has less reason to rely on ad hoc adjudication to formulate new standards of conduct. Filling in the interstices of legislation should be performed as much as possible, through the quasi-legislative promulgation of rules to be applied in the future. But a rigid requirement always requiring prospective rule making would reduce the flexibility of the agency to deal with specialized problems as they arise. 332 U.S. at 202, 67 S.Ct. 1575. The Court then went on to state some of the circumstances under which adjudication would be a proper method to formulate new rules of conduct.

> In other words, problems may arise in a case which the administrative agency could not reasonably foresee problems which must be solved despite the absence of a relevant > general rule. Or the agency may not have had sufficient experience with a particular problem to warrant rigidifying its tentative judgment into a hard and fast rule. Or the problem may be so specialized and varying in nature as to be impossible of capture within the boundaries of a general rule. In those situations, the agency must retain power to deal with the problems on a case-to-case basis if the administrative process is to be effective. . . . And the choice made between proceeding by general rule or by individual, ad hoc litigation is one that lies primarily in the informed discretion of the administrative agency. See Columbia Broadcasting System v. United States, 316 U.S. 407, 421, 62 S.Ct. 1194 [1202], 86 L.Ed. 1563.

Accepting the general desirability of the rule making approach to the formulation of general standards of conduct, the question is whether by explicitly conferring rule making authority on the Commission by the enactment of Section 18 of the Act, the Congress reduced the Commission's authority to proceed on a case by case basis under Section 5 of the Act. Stated somewhat differently, does the FTC with its express power to promulgate rules under Section 18, nevertheless have the power under Section 5 to grapple with fact situations which may result in decisions which articulate general standards of conduct? In Chenery, supra, the Supreme Court concluded that the SEC had the power to adjudicate cases from which emerged general standards of conduct despite the fact that Congress had granted the agency explicit rule making power. Here the circumstances supporting non-interference with the exercise of the Commission's discretion are even more compelling than in Chenery.

Neither the adjudicatory nor the rule making proceedings have been held. No factual record of any kind is available. True the plaintiffs urge that non-disclosure is industrywide and the disclosure provisions of the Commission's proposed order which has been served on Beltone are as broad as its proposed rule. But absent an administrative hearing of either type it would be presumptious for a court to conclude that the Commission, which is the primary adjudicator of facts in such disputes, and to whose expertise courts must defer, will not encounter problems in either proceeding which it could not reasonably foresee, or will not conclude that it has not had sufficient experience with the particular problem to warrant rigidifying its tentative judgment into a hard and fast rule or will not, contrary to the plaintiffs' predictions, encounter varying fact situations which require individualized treatment.

[18,19] Therefore, insofar as the plaintiffs' Count III rule making contention is concerned, Section 18 prescribes the procedure to be followed by the Commission when it exercises its rule making authority, but Section 18 does not diminish the Commission's authority to proceed on a case by case basis in appropriate circumstances. On the record here no showing has been made that the circumstances are so inappropriate as to warrant prehearing collateral judicial interference with the Commission's judgment.

Under Borden v. F. T. C., supra, a district court should not interfere with an administrative proceeding unless the agency has clearly violated the law, the issue does not involve agency expertise or factual determinations or adequate judicial review will not be available upon later review of the agency's order. The plaintiffs have failed to meet any of these standards. The Commission is acting within the authority granted it by the Congress and it is not proceeding in an arbitrary and capricious manner against Beltone. Although the facts underlying the parties' presentation of the issues here are not in dispute, the potential for fact variations and the need for Commission expertise are inherent in the entire subject of advertising disclosures in the hearing aid industry. Finally, adequate judicial review of both the rule making and adjudicatory proceedings are available upon the completion of the proceedings.

For the foregoing reasons the plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction is denied, the defendants' alternative motions to dismiss and for summary judgment are granted and judgment will enter dismissing the action.

Civ. A. No. 75-15. F.T.C. File No. 99-199.

(United States District Court, District of Delaware, September 22, 1975)

1. RELEVANCE OF REQUESTED MATERIALS TO CONTESTED ISSUES IS FIRST QUESTION TO BE TAKEN IN MEASURING PROPRIETY OF WIDE-RANGING DISCOVERY REQUEST.

   Initial inquiry to be taken in measuring the propriety of a wide-ranging discovery request is whether the materials sought are relevant to any of the legal and factual issues being contested by the parties.

2. FOR REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION, THE "SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE" TEST ONLY APPLIES TO REVIEWING AGENCY FINDINGS MADE ON A RECORDED HEARING OR TO MEASURE AGENCY ACTION BASED ON AN ADJUDICATORY HEARING.

   "Substantial evidence" test for review of administrative action applies only to measure agency action based on an adjudicatory hearing or to review agency findings made on a hearing record.

3. DE NOVO REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION IS LIMITED TO CASES OF ADJUDICATORY AGENCY ACTION WHERE INVESTIGATIVE PROCEDURES ARE

* Reported in 403 F.Supp. 1000 (1975). See also pages 1205 and 1293 herein.

INADEQUATE OR WHEN NEW ISSUES ARE RAISED IN AN AGENCY PROCEEDING TO ENFORCE NONADJUDICATORY ACTION.

De novo review of administrative action is limited to circumstances where the agency action is adjudicatory in nature and the agency fact-finding procedures are inadequate or when issues which were not before the agency are raised in a proceeding to enforce nonadjudicatory agency action.

4. FEDERAL COURT IN WHICH ACTION FOR PREENFORCEMENT JUDICIAL REVIEW WAS SOUGHT, WAS LIMITED TO DETERMINING WHETHER AGENCY ACTION WAS ARBITRARY OR CAPRICIOUS RATHER THAN REVIEWING AGENCY ACTION UNDER SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE TEST OF DE NOVO.

Federal court in which action for preenforcement judicial review of Federal Trade Commission annual line of business reporting program was sought was not reviewing an adjudicatory agency proceeding nor reviewing the findings of a hearing required to be on the record so that review of the agency action would not be under the substantial evidence test or de novo, but rather would be limited to determining whether agency action was arbitrary or capricious.

5. CONTENTION OF UNDUE BURDENSOMENESS OF F.T.C.'S LINE OF BUSINESS REPORTING PROGRAM WOULD BE MEASURED BY THE ARBITRARY AND CAPRICIOUS STANDARD.

Contention that Federal Trade Commission's line of business reporting program was unduly burdensome would be measured by the arbitrary and capricious standard.

6. COURT MUST CONSIDER WHETHER DECISION WAS BASED ON RELEVANT FACTORS OR WHETHER THERE WAS A CLEAR ERROR OF JUDGMENT IN DETERMINING ARBITRARY OR CAPRICIOUS AGENCY ACTION.

[100] In making a determination as to whether agency action is arbitrary or capricious, the court must consider whether the decision was based on a consideration of the relevant factors and whether there has been a clear error of judgment.

7. BROAD DISCRETION GRANTED F.T.C. UNDER STATUTE AUTHORIZING REQUIREMENT OF PERIODIC REPORTING OF INFORMATION BY ECONOMIC ENTITIES DOES NOT PRECLUDE CONSIDERATION OF RELEVANT FACTORS IN ADOPTING REPORTING REQUIREMENTS SUCH AS THE LINE OF BUSINESS PROGRAM.

Although significant discretion has been lodged with the Federal Trade Commission under statute authorizing it to require periodic information reporting by economic entities, the broad discretion does not mean that there are no factors which the FTC must consider in adopting reporting requirements such as the line of business reports program.

8. NATURE OF ACTION FOR PREENFORCEMENT REVIEW OF F.T.C. LINE OF BUSINESS PROGRAM WAS NOT MERELY A SUMMARY PROCEEDING TO ENFORCE F.T.C. ORDERS TO WHICH DISCOVERY WAS INAPPROPRIATE, BUT RATHER AN EXAMINATION OF THE F.T.C. PROGRAM ITSELF TO ADJUDICATE ALLEGED ILLEGALITIES.

Action brought by several corporate entities for preenforcement review of Federal Trade Commission's line of business reporting program did not involve enforcement of Commission orders but rather involved an examination of the program itself in order to adjudicate contentions regarding the program's alleged illegality and was not merely a summary proceeding to enforce FTC orders to which no discovery would be appropriate.

9. AGENCY INVOLVED IN ACTION FOR PREENFORCEMENT REVIEW WOULD BE REQUIRED TO CERTIFY TO COURT MATERIALS RELIED ON OR USED TO PROMULGATE ITS RULE, SINCE IT DID NOT HAVE THE RIGHT TO DESIGNATE WHICH ITEMS IT CONSIDERED TO BE ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD AND REFUSED TO SUBMIT MATERIALS TO THEIR OPPONENTS OR TO THE COURT.

Agency whose rule was being subjected to preenforcement review did not have the right to designate whatever items it considered to be the administrative record and thus to refuse to submit, either to the court, or to agency's opponents, other materials employed or relied upon by the agency in promulgating its rule; agency would be required to certify to the court all materials considered in adoption of the rule.

10. AGENCY MAY NOT LIMIT JUDICIAL INQUIRY BY PRODUCING PORTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE RECORDS WHICH REVEALS ADMINISTRATIVE CONSIDERATION OF ALL RELEVANT FACTORS, EVEN IF COURT'S REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION IS LIMITED TO DETERMINATION OF WHETHER THE ACTION IS ARBITRARY AND CAPRICIOUS.

Even though review of particular administrative action may be limited to determination of whether it is arbitrary and capricious, judicial inquiry may not be limited by agency merely producing some portion of the administrative record which reveals administrative consideration of all relevant factors.

11. EXPLANATIONS NOT EMPLOYED IN ADMINISTRATIVE DECISIONS AND OFFERED SUBSEQUENT TO ACTION BEING REVIEWED ARE UNACCEPTABLE BY THE COURTS.

Courts are not free to accept explanations of counsel which were not employed by the agency for administrative decisions and which were offered subsequent to the occurrence of administrative action being reviewed.

12. NEITHER CONGRESSIONAL CORRESPONDENCE SENT BY F.T.C. CHAIRMAN, NOR STAFF REPORTS PREPARED PRIOR TO PROMULGATION OF RULE, NOR LETTERS SENT IN CONNECTION WITH DENIALS OF MOTIONS TO QUASH PROVIDE BASIS FOR FINDING PROMULGATION OF RULE NOT TO BE ARBITRARY AND CAPRICIOUS IN AS MUCH AS THEY CANNOT BE CONSIDERED AS CONTEMPORANEOUS EXPLANATIONS.

Neither reports which were prepared by Federal Trade Commission staff and which were prepared prior to promulgation of rule under attack, nor letter sent by chairman of the FTC to United States Senator some two and one-half months prior to the promulgation of the rule nor letters sent by the Commission in connection with denial of motions to quash the rule after it had been promulgated could be considered as contemporaneous explanations of the Commission action or provide basis for finding that the action in promulgating the rule was not arbitrary and capricious.

13. COURT WOULD NOT REMAND, IN ABSENCE OF SUFFICIENT ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD TO DETERMINE ARBITRARY AND CAPRICIOUS AGENCY ACTION, TO AGENCY TO SET FORTH AFTER THE FACT REASONING, BUT WOULD ALLOW USE OF DISCOVERY PROCEDURES.

Where administrative record was insufficient permit determination of whether agency action was arbitrary and capricious, court would not remand to the agency to allow it to set forth its reasons after the fact but rather would allow use of discovery procedures in connection with action.

14. RELEVANCE, UNDER DISCOVERY RULES, IS TO BE MEASURED BY REFERENCE TO NATURE OF SUBJECT MATTER, NOT ACCORDING TO SPECIFIC ISSUES RAISED BY PLEADINGS.

Under rules of discovery, relevance is to be measured, not according to the [1002] specific issues raised by the pleadings, but rather by reference to the nature of the subject matter.

15. IN ORDER THAT REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATIVE DECISIONS BE MADE PROMPTLY, THE USUAL BROAD SCOPE OF DISCOVERY IS SUBJECT TO RESTRICTION.

In reviewing administrative decisions, the usual broad scope of discovery is subject to restriction in order that the review may be had promptly.

16. ENCOURAGEMENT OF FRANK DISCUSSION WITHIN THE GOVERNMENT REGARDING FORMULATION OF POLICY IS THE PURPOSE OF THE EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE AGAINST DISCLOSURE OF INTRA-AGENCY ADVISORY COMMUNICATIONS DURING DISCOVERY.

Purpose behind the executive privilege against disclosure during discovery of intraagency advisory communications is the encouragement of frank discussion within the government as regards the formulation of policy.

17. FACTUAL MATERIAL CONTAINED IN DELIBERATIVE MEMORANDA IS DISCOVERABLE IF SUSCEPTIBLE TO SEVERENCE FROM ITS CONTEXT.

Executive privilege against discovery does not attach to purely factual communications within or between agencies so long as disclosure would not compromise military or state secrets; Factual material contained in deliberative memoranda is discoverable if susceptible to severence from its context.

18. ON BASIS OF AN AD HOC BALANCING OF THE HARM RESULTING FROM DISCLOSURE AGAINST INDIVIDUAL NEED FOR MATERIALS, EVEN THOSE MATERIALS ACTUALLY ENCOMPASSED WITHIN CONFINES OF EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE ARE NOT EXEMPTED FROM DISCLOSURE.

Even materials actually encompassed within limited confines of executive privilege are not absolutely exempted from disclosure; privilege can be overridden on basis of an ad hoc balancing of individual need for materials against the harm resulting from disclosure.

19. BURDEN OF DEMONSTRATING PROPER ENTITLEMENT TO DISCLOSURE EXEMPTION, AS WITH ANY DISCOVERY PRIVILEGE, RESTS ON THE CLAIMANT OF EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE.

As with any discovery privilege, burden is on the claimant of executive privilege to demonstrate a proper entitlement to exemption from disclosure.

20. PRECISE DESIGNATION AND DESCRIPTION OF THE DOCUMENTS, AND SPECIFIC REASONS FOR PRESERVATION OF THE CONFIDENTIALITY OF THE COMMUNICATIONS MUST BE SUBMITTED BY THE HEAD OF AN AGENCY, AFTER HIS PERSONAL CONSIDERATION, TO PROPERLY SUPPORT A CLAIM OF EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE.

To properly support a claim of executive privilege, it must be made by the head of the applicable agency after actual personal consideration by that officer, there must be a specific designation and description of the document claimed to be privileged, and there must be a demonstration of precise and certain reasons for preserving the confidentiality of the communications.

21. WHERE F.T.C. CLAIMED EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE FOR DOCUMENTS WHICH APPEARED TO MOSTLY CONTAIN FACTUAL MATERIAL, FAILURE TO SET FORTH FULL DESCRIPTION OF DOCUMENTS AND SPECIFIC REASONS FOR THE PRESERVATION OF THEIR CONFIDENTIALITY, TOGETHER WITH CHAIRMAN'S FAILURE TO INDICATE HIS PERSONAL REVIEW OF THE MATERIAL, PRECLUDES EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE DETERMINATION.

Where certain documents with respect to which Federal Trade Commission claimed executive privilege appeared, upon reading attenuated descriptions, to contain largely factual material, failure of agency to fully describe the documents and to set forth precise and certain reasons for preserving the confidentiality of the documents, along with failure of FTC chairman to indicate that he had engaged in a personal review of the documents, precluded determination that the documents were protected by executive privilege.

22. DESPITE IMPROPER RAISING OF CLAIM OF EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE BY AGENCY, COURT WOULD NOT RULE SINCE PUBLIC INTEREST WAS FACTOR IN DETERMINING PROPER SCOPE OF DISCOVERY; INSTEAD, AGENCY INVOLVED WAS GRANTED OPPORTUNITY TO RAISE CLAIM PROPERLY.

Even though claim of executive privilege had not been properly raised, court would not rule, since public interest was a factor to be considered in determining proper scope of discovery, that no privilege attached to documents as result of failure to properly raise claim of executive privilege but rather would give the agency involved another opportunity to properly raise the claim.

23. DETERMINATION THAT DOCUMENTS WERE PROTECTED BY EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE WAS PRECLUDED BY FAILURE OF F.T.C. TO ARTICULATE PRECISE AND CERTAIN REASONS FOR PRESERVING CONFIDENTIALITY OF COMMUNICATIONS SOUGHT TO BE DISCOVERED BY DEPOSITION OF F.T.C. OFFICIAL.

Failure of Federal Trade Commission to articulate precise and certain reasons for preserving confidentiality of certain communications which were sought to be discovered by deposition of FTC official precluded determination that the documents were protected by executive privilege.

24. BY TESTIFYING AS TO WHAT HE HAD TOLD A COMMISSION STAFF MEMBER, A COMMISSION OFFICIAL COULD NOT CLAIM EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE IN REGARD TO WHAT THAT PERSON HAD TOLD HIM.

If executive privilege has been properly invoked, Federal Trade Commission would be deemed to have waived the privilege with respect to two specific questions by allowing FTC official to respond to prior deposition questions in which the substances of the official's ad[1003]visory communications were divulged; official could not testify as to what he had told another member of the Commission or its staff and yet claim executive privilege with respect to what the other person had told him.

25. COURT WAS NOT REQUIRED TO COMPEL F.T.C. OFFICIAL TO ANSWER QUESTIONS WHERE STAFF MEMBER'S VIEWS WITH RESPECT TO RULE UNDER REVIEW HAD NO RELEVANCE TO COURT'S EVENTUAL DETERMINATION AS TO WHETHER PROMULGATION OF RULE WAS ARBITRARY OR CAPRICIOUS.

Federal Trade Commission staff member's views with respect to rule which was subject of preenforcement review proceeding had no relevance to court's eventual determination as to whether the promulgation of the rule was arbitrary and capricious so that, even if any executive privilege claim with respect to deposition testimony by the official may have been waived by the FTC, court was not required to compel the official to answer the questions.

26. ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE WOULD NOT PROTECT DOCUMENTS FROM DISCOVERY WHERE DOCUMENTS SOUGHT WERE NOT SHOWN TO HAVE BEEN PREVIOUSLY COMMUNICATED TO F.T.C. COUNSEL AND WHERE IT WAS DIFFICULT TO PROVE CONFIDENTIAL MANNER OF COMMUNICATION OF ORIGINAL INFORMATION BECAUSE OF WIDE DISTRIBUTION OF THE DOCUMENTS WITHIN THE AGENCY.

Where there was no showing that documents sought by parties who were seeking preenforcement review of Federal Trade Commission rule had previously been communicated to the FTC counsel, and where, in view of the apparently wide distribution of the documents within the FTC, it was difficult to conclude that the original information was communicated in a confidential manner, attorney-client privilege would not shield the documents from discovery.

27. DISCOVERY IN THE FORM OF DEPOSITIONS FROM CERTAIN AGENCY OFFICIALS WAS IMPROPER AND IRRELEVANT WHERE SCOPE OF REVIEW TO DETERMINE WHETHER AGENCY ACTION WAS ARBITRARY AND CAPRICIOUS WAS LIMITED TO ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD.

Where scope of review of agency action was limited to the administrative record to determine whether the action was arbitrary and capricious, discovery in the form of depositions from certain agency officials was improper and irrelevant.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 403 F.Supp. 1000.)

On motion to compel preenforcement judicial review of F.T.C.'s annual line-of-business reporting program and a cross motion for protective order, court held that its area of review was limited to whether agency actions was capricious and arbitrary; cause would not be remanded to Commission for post hoc assertion of bases for action where administrative record is insufficient; executive privilege claim for particular documents was improperly raised; and limited discovery under federal rules would be used to reveal the rationale behind adoption of the program.

Before MURRAY M. SCHWARTZ, District Judge:

This case involves pre-enforcement judicial review of the Federal Trade Commission ("Commission" or "FTC") annual line-of-business reporting program.[1] Previously this Court preliminarily enjoined the defendant Commission from enforcing its Orders to File Form LB against the plaintiffs in this action and related litigation.[2] The instant controversy arises over two discovery motions, the Commission's Motion for a Protective Order and the plaintiffs' Motion to Compel.

By its Motion for a Protective Order[3] the FTC seeks to halt the depositions of four Commission officials involved in the development and administration of the LB Program.[4] In support of its motion the defendant Commission contends both that the depositions will be unduly burdensome, resulting in total disruption [1064] of the LB Program, and that all discovery in this action is improper. Further, the Commission has sought, in the event its motion is denied, to have the Court certify this question to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).[5] Plaintiffs have responded by asserting the Commission has failed to demonstrate the "good cause" required by Fed.R.Civ.Proc. 26(c) to justify issuance of a protective order. Plaintiffs oppose the FTC request for section 1292(b) certification on the ground that the matter before the Court involves no "controlling question of law."

[4] Plaintiffs had originally noticed a total of nine depositions of Commission officials. To date five of the nine depositions have been completed and the Commission seeks to prevent the plaintiffs from taking the remaining four depositions.

[5] See Note 58, infra.

Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel[6] seeks 209 documents currently in defendants' possession,[7] as well as an order requiring a Commission official to answer 17 questions as to which claims of privilege were interposed during the taking of his deposition. This particular facet of the instant litigation has been especially acrimonious, resulting in a wrestling match[8] between opposing counsel and the Commission-induced disappearance of the Hubler documents during a deposition recess. However, in addition to the physical defenses raised by Commission counsel, several legal issues have been raised by the parties in connection with this motion. The Commission asserts that none of the documents or the 17 questions have any relevance whatsoever to the current suit. Further, the Commission has attempted to raise the executive privilege attaching to intraagency advisory communications as a bar to discovery with respect to many[9] of the documents and the 17 specific questions. Plaintiffs have countered by arguing that the documents and subject-matter of the deposition questions are indeed relevant, the claim of executive privilege was improperly raised, and even if properly raised, subject to a multitude of specific exceptions. Plaintiffs also contend that any executive privilege claims properly attaching to the deposition questions were waived by the Commission during examination of the Commission official.

The parties' arguments in support and in opposition to the two motions are considered separately below.

I. SCOPE OF REVIEW

A. In General

[1] The initial inquiry to be undertaken in measuring the propriety of a wide-ranging discovery request is whether the materials sought are relevant to any of the legal and factual issues being contested by the parties.[10] In order to measure this relevance factor in a case involving judicial review of agency ac[1005]tion under the Administrative

[6] Docket No. 54.

[7] The 209 documents are part of a total of 294 documents identified and briefly described in Hubler deposition Exhibit No. 50, Docket No. 46. Both parties have referred to those materials as the "Hubler Documents." The Court adopts this terminology.

[8] The pugilistic exhibition is described in great detail at pp. 369-73 of the Hubler Deposition Transcript, Docket No. 65D. The Court is impressed by the concentration of the lawyers, particularly those directly engaged in the struggle for possession of the Hubler documents, which enabled them to remember to state exactly what had happened for the record. The result is an entertaining series of combat descriptions which prove conclusively that litigation is more than a battle of wits.

[9] See note 40, infra and accompanying text for a precise delineation of the exact number of documents claimed to be privileged against disclosure.

[10] F.R.Civ.Proc. 26(b)(1) provides that:

> (1) In General. Parties may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action, whether it relates to the claim or defense of the party seeking discovery or to the claim or defense of any other party, including the existence, description, nature, custody, condition and location of any books, documents, or other tangible things and the identity and location of persons having knowledge of any discoverable matter. It is not ground for objection that the information sought will be

Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 551 et seq., it is first necessary to precisely delineate the appropriate scope and standard of such judicial review. See Citizens to Preserve Overton Park v. Volpe, 401 U.S. 402, 413, 91 S.Ct. 814, 28 L.Ed.2d 136 (1971).

The starting point for determination of the review standard is section 706 of the A.P.A., 5 U.S.C. § 706.[11] That section provides six basic standards by which propriety of administrative action is to be judicially measured. Of these standards, the "arbitrary and capricious" test, 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A) and the statutory mandate to set aside agency action that fails to satisfy various statutory, constitutional or procedural requirements, 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(B), (C) and (D) govern all cases in which judicial review is authorized by section 701 and 702 of the A.P.A., 5 U.S.C. §§ 701 and 702.[12] Overton Park, supra at 414, 91 S.Ct. 814. Section 706 provides two additional review standards, the "substantial evidence" test, 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(E) and de novo review, 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(F), both of which apply in only limited instances.

[2] The "substantial evidence" test applies in only two situations. First, this test is properly employed to measure agency action based on an adjudicatory hearing. Overton Park, supra at 414, 91 S.Ct. 814; Camp v. Pitts, 411 U.S. 138, 141, 93 S.Ct. 1241, 36 L.Ed.2d 106 (1973). The only other opportunity for correct utilization of this test is review of agency findings made on a hearing record under 5 U.S.C. §§ 556 and 557. However, the applicability of these two sections are controlled by 5 U.S.C. § 553(c)[13] which authorizes review on the record under sections 556 and 557 only where some other statute requires such hearings to be inadmissible at the trial if the information sought appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

[11] 5 U.S.C. § 706 provides:

> To the extent necessary to decision and when presented, the reviewing court shall decide all relevant questions of law, interpret constitutional and statutory provisions, and determine the meaning or applicability of the terms of an agency action. The reviewing court shall—
> (1) compel agency action unlawfully withheld or unreasonably delayed; and
> (2) hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions found to be—
> (A) arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law;
> (B) contrary to constitutional right, power, privilege, or immunity;
> (C) in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of statutory right;
> (D) without observance of procedure required by law;
> (E) unsupported by substantial evidence in a case subject to sections 556 and 557 of this title or otherwise reviewed on the record of an agency hearing provided by statute; or
> (F) unwarranted by the facts to the extent that the facts are subject to trial de novo by the reviewing court. In making the foregoing determinations, the court shall review the whole record or those parts of it cited by a party, and due account shall be taken of the rule of prejudicial error.

[12] 5 U.S.C. § 701(a) provides that:

> "(a) This chapter applies, according to the provisions thereof, except to the extent that—
> (1) statutes preclude judicial review; or
> (2) agency action is committed to agency discretion by law."

5 U.S.C. § 702 provides that:

> "A person suffering legal wrong because of agency action, or adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action within the meaning of a relevant statute, is entitled to judicial review."

[13] 5 U.S.C. § 553(c) provides in part that:

> ". . . When rules are required by statute to be made on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing, sections 556 and 557 of this title apply instead of this subsection."

on the record. United States v. Allegheny-Ludlum Steel, 406 U.S. 742, 756-8, 92 S.Ct. 1941, 32 L.Ed.2d 453 (1972); Overton Park, supra; Camp v. Pitts, supra. See, e.g., Dry Colors Manufacturers Ass'n, Inc. v. Dep't of Labor, 486 F.2d 98, at 104, n. 8 (3d Cir. 1973); Siegel v. Atomic Energy Commission, 130 U.S.App.D.C. 307, 400 F.2d 778, 785 (1967). See generally 2 K. Davis, Administrative Law Treatise § 13.08 (1958 ed.).

[3] De novo review is similarly limited to two specific sets of circumstance.

[1006] "First, such de novo review is authorized when the [agency] action is adjudicatory in nature and the agency fact finding procedures are inadequate. And, there may be independent judicial fact finding when issues that were not before the agency are raised in a proceeding to enforce non-adjudicatory agency action." Overton Park, supra 401 U.S. at 415, 91 S.Ct. at 823; Camp v. Pitts, supra 411 U.S. at 141-2, 93 S.Ct. 1241.

[4] It is clear in the instant controversy that neither the "substantial evidence" test nor de novo review are applicable. First, this Court is not reviewing an adjudicatory agency proceeding. Nor is it reviewing the findings of a hearing required to be on the record under 5 U.S.C. §§ 556 and 557. While the Court has held that for purposes of preliminary injunctive relief the FTC's promulgation of the LB Program in August, 1974, constituted rulemaking under section 4 of the A.P.A., 5 U.S.C. § 553, there is nothing in the Federal Trade Commission statute, 15 U.S.C. § 41 et seq., which requires such rulemaking to be on the record and accompanied by formal findings of fact. Secondly, this is a pre-enforcement proceeding, not an action to enforce non-adjudicatory agency action.[14] Accordingly, the "substantial evidence" test and de novo review are equally inapposite to this litigation.

Therefore, whatever review is ultimately undertaken, it will be largely centered around the "arbitrary or capricious" test. In addition, plaintiffs' arguments that the LB Program violates statutory, constitutional and procedural provisions will require review under the standards provided in 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(B), (C) and (D).[15]

Plaintiffs have challenged the FTC's adoption of the LB Program on, at least, six separate grounds. These include, inter alia, claims that: (1) the Commission exceeded its statutory authority in issuing its order of August 2, 1974, establishing the LB Program; (2) the LB Program is excessively burdensome given the high cost of compliance and the allegedly dubious value of the information to be collected; (3) the ambiguous and occasionally contradictory reporting instructions, when combined with the requirement of certifying reported data as true at the risk of criminal sanctions, deprive plaintiffs of their due process rights under the Fifth Amendment; (4) the reporting requirements constitute an unconstitutional taking of property because of the high cost of compliance and the allegedly substantial risks regarding public dissemination of confidential information; (5) the reporting requirements violate their Fourth Amendment rights to be free from unwarranted searches; and (6) the FTC's promulgation of the LB Program failed to comply with procedural requirements articulated in the A.P.A.

[14] The Court does not mean to suggest that if this proceeding was an enforcement proceeding brought by the Commission de novo review would be either proper or appropriate. That question is not here presented and accordingly no views on it will be proffered.

[15] See note 11 supra.

Issue number 1 is governed by the standard enunciated in 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(C).[16] Issues 3, 4, and 5 will all be controlled by the review standard contained in 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(B).[17] Issue number 6,[18] will be controlled by 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(D).

[5,6] The remaining contention that the LB Program is unduly burdensome must be measured by the arbitrary or capricious standard. Although the ultimate standard of review on this issue is quite narrow, the Court must conduct a [1007] searching inquiry into the facts surrounding the FTC's actions. Overton Park, supra 401 U.S. at 415-6, 95 S.Ct. 814. See Bowman Transportation, Inc. v. Arkansas Best Freight System, Inc., 419 U.S. 281, 285, 95 S.Ct. 438, 42 L.Ed.2d 447 (1974). In making a determination as to whether the agency's action was arbitrary or capricious, "the court must consider whether the decision was based on a consideration of the relevant factors and whether there has been a clear error of judgment." Overton Park, supra 401 U.S. at 416, 91 S.Ct. at 823. Bowman Transportation, supra 419 U.S. at 285-6, 95 S.Ct. 438. See generally, L. Jaffe, Judicial Control of Administrative Action 182 (1965).

[7] In Overton Park, supra, the "relevant factors" were statutorily articulated in the underlying statute which authorized the administrative action. In contrast, the relevant factors to be considered by the Commission in promulgating programs of the type typified by the LB Program are nowhere delineated in the statute.[19] Thus, there exists a question as to exactly what factors had to have been considered by the

[18] The FTC having admitted non-compliance with the A.P.A., this question was initially answered in the negative with the issuance of a preliminary injunction as to plaintiff, A. O. Smith, et al., on February 19, 1975. The question of the correctness of issuance of that preliminary injunction is currently before the Third Circuit Court of Appeals.

[19] The statute upon which the FTC relies authorizes the Commission to require periodic information reporting by economic entities engaged in interstate commerce. 15 U.S.C. A. § 46. Section 46(a) and (b) provide:

> The Commission shall also have power—
> Investigation of corporations
> (a) to gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, excepting banks and common carriers subject to the Act to regulate commerce, and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships.

Commission in formulating the LB Program. While the resolution of this question is not presently required, it is clear at this juncture that significant discretion has been lodged with the Commission under 15 U.S.C. § 46. However, this broad discretion cannot be taken to indicate there are no factors which the agency must consider in adopting the LB Program. See Davis, Administrative Law Text, 148.

Federal courts, in the post-Overton era, when faced with challenges to administrative action alleged to be arbitrary and capricious have on occasion identified "relevant factors" by extrapolating the purposes of the underlying statutory authorization and translating those purposes into the precise factual context before them. See, e. g., Hanly v. Mitchell, 460 F.2d 640, 646-8 (2d Cir. 1972); Getty Oil Company v. Ruckelshaus, 467 F.2d 349, 355, 357 (3d Cir. 1972); Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corporation v. F. P. C., 160 U.S.App.D.C. 1, 488 F.2d 1325, 1329-30 (1973); Getty Oil Company v. Ruckelshaus, 342 F.Supp. 1006, 1015 (D.Del.1972). Still other federal courts have articulated relevant factors by reference solely to the factual circumstances extant at the point an administrative decision is made. See e. g., Duquesne Light Company v. EPA, 522 F.2d 1186 (3d Cir. 1975). While this technique might, at first blush, appear to smack of judicial intrusion into the domain of agency discretion and expertise, cf. EDF v. Ruckelshaus, 142 U.S.App.D.C. 74, 439 F.2d 584, 598 (1971) (dissenting opinion), such an undertaking is designed to protect the exercise of [1008] an agency's discretion by providing a legal framework of statutorily-emanating guidelines and standards within which such discretionary authority must be exercised. See EDF v. Ruckelshaus, supra at 597-8. Cf. Davis, Administrative Law Text, 148. Accordingly, the eventual inquiry into the Commission's actions in promulgating the LB Program will ultimately focus upon whether the Commission considered all relevant factors and whether there have been any clear errors of judgment. However, in conducting its review, the Court "is not empowered to substitute its judgment for that of the agency." Overton Park, supra.

The FTC maintains no discovery whatsoever is appropriate in this action. It argues alternatively that this is either a summary enforcement proceeding where discovery is ordinarily improper or a pre-enforcement review of agency action in which judicial review is confined to the administrative record. Under either contention, any discovery, whether in the form of depositions, interrogatories or requests for production of documents, is, according to the Commission, unnecessary.

Such reports and answers shall be made under oath, or otherwise, as the Commission may prescribe, and shall be filed with the Commission within such reasonable period as the Commission may prescribe, unless additional time be granted in any case by the Commission.

[8] The Commission's argument that this is merely a summary proceeding to enforce its orders to file Form LB can itself be disposed of in summary fashion. Rather than being an enforcement proceeding brought by the Commission, this is a pre-enforcement review action[20] brought by several corporate entities subject to the reporting requirements of the Commission's LB Program. As such the Court is not concerned with enforcement of the Commission's orders but is instead examining the LB Program itself in order to adjudicate plaintiffs' various contentions regarding the Program's alleged illegality.[21]

The Commission's second argument that no discovery is proper where review is confined to the administrative record or only legal questions are raised is more troublesome. First, the Commission is correct in maintaining that review of administrative action alleged to be arbitrary and capricious is to be conducted through an examination of the administrative record which confronted the agency at the time it acted. Overton Park, supra; Camp v. Pitts, supra; Dry Colors Manufacturers Ass'n v. Dep't of Labor, 486 F.2d 98, 104 n. 8 (3d Cir. 1973); Bradley v. Weinberger, 483 F.2d 410, 414 (1st Cir. 1973). However, serious questions have been raised in this proceeding as to the scope of the administrative record to be reviewed and, as a result, a short digression on that issue is in order.

i) Composition of the Administrative Record

[9] At oral argument on the competing discovery motions the Commission argued it had the right to designate whatever items it considered to be the administrative record. Accordingly, it urged it was under no duty to submit either to the Court or to its opponents all materials employed or relied upon by the Commission in promulgating its Line of Business Program. This contention is unacceptable. Allowing administrative agencies to preclude judicial access to materials relied upon by an agency in taking whatever action is then being subject to judicial scrutiny would make a mockery of judicial review. Moreover, it would prevent courts from discharging their duty to make a "searching and careful" inquiry to determine whether all relevant factors were considered by the agency and whether there has been a clear error of agency judgment as set forth in Overton Park, supra.[22] Appa[1009]lachian Power Company v. Environmental Protection Agency, 477 F.2d 495, 507 (4th Cir. 1973). See Silva v. Lynn, 482 F.2d 1282, 1283 n. 1 (1st Cir. 1973). It is therefore not surprising that the weight of judicial authority is contrary to the Commission's expressed desire to designate selected documents as the administrative record. The Supreme Court in Overton Park emphasized that review is to be conducted upon the "full administrative record" before the agency at the time it made its decision, 401 U.S. at 420, 91 S.Ct. 814. Several Circuit Courts of Appeal have adopted similarly stringent and all encompassing standards for determining the scope of administrative records.[23] Accordingly, the Commission will be ordered to promptly certify to this Court all materials considered by the Commissioners in their adoption of the LB Program on August 2, 1974.[24]

[20] See Opinion of February 19, 1975 and March 18, 1975 in this and related cases.

[10] It is possible to argue that since judicial review of administrative action alleged to be arbitrary and capricious encompasses an examination of the administrative record to determine whether all relevant factors were considered, Overton Park, supra, any portion of an administrative record that reveals administrative consideration of all relevant factors should be sufficient to delimit further judicial inquiry. However, such a position cannot be maintained because one of the many bases which justify the "substantial" nature of this type of judicial inquiry is to determine if any impermissible factors have entered into an agency's reasoning process. See, E. D. F. V. Ruckelshaus, 142 U.S.App.D.C. 74, 439 F.2d 584, 597-8 (1971). See, e. g., D.C. Federation of Civic Associations v. Volpe, 148 U.S.App.D.C. 207, 459 F.2d 1231 (1972).

ii) The Importance of Administrative Findings

[11] Federal courts engaged in judicial review of administrative action alleged to be arbitrary and capricious have often emphasized administrative findings as a much needed aid for properly focusing the "substantial inquiry" necessitated by such allegations. See generally Davis, Administrative Law Text 148 332-4 (1972); Scott, "In Quest of Reason: The Licensing Decisions of The Federal Banking Agencies," 42 Chi.L.Rev. 235 (1975). In Burlington Truck Lines v. U.S., 371 U.S. 156, 83 S.Ct. 239, 9 L.Ed.2d 207 (1962), the Supreme Court stated effective

[22] In the instant case the Commission was ordered to prepare a list of materials it considered to be the administrative record. An examination of this list (Docket No. 70) reveals a sparse collection of items which would render a "rational determination" by this Court on the "arbitrary and capricious" test well nigh impossible. Appalachian Power, infra at 507.

[23] See, e. g., Bradley v. Weinberger, supra at 414; Silva v. Lynn, supra at 1283 n. 1; Appalachian Power, supra at 507; Dry Colors, supra at 104, n. 8. Accord, Environmental Defense Fund v. Ruckelshaus, 142 U.S.App.D.C. 74, 439 F.2d 584, 597-8 (1971); Chrysler Corporation v. Dep't of Transportation, 472 F.2d 659, 669 (6th Cir. 1972).

judicial review, especially where discretionary administrative actions were challenged, required findings or explanations sufficient to reveal the basis of administrative action so that a determination could be made as to whether the contested acts were actually within the agency's discretion.[25] Id. at 167–9, 83 S.Ct. 239. Moreover, courts are not free to accept explanations of counsel for administrative decisions not employed by the agency and subsequent to the occurrence of the administrative action being reviewed. Id. at 168–9, 83 S.Ct. 239. This is because judicial acceptance of such "post-hoc rationalizations" would propel reviewing courts " 'into the [1010] domain which Congress has set aside exclusively for the administrative agency.' " Id. at 169, 83 S.Ct. at 246 citing SEC v. Chenery Corp., 332 U.S. 194, 196, 67 S.Ct. 1575, 91 L.Ed. 1995 (1947).

In Overton Park, the Supreme Court once again took notice of the need for informal findings that serve to explain administrative action. In that case, even though review on remand was to be conducted "on the full administrative record that was before the [agency] at the time [it] made [its] decision[s]," 401 U.S. at 420, 91 S.Ct. at 825, further explanations by the agency might be necessary if the "bare record" failed to disclose which factors were considered. Id. See Davis, Administrative Law Text 332–4. Similarly, in Camp v. Pitts, supra, mention was again made of the need for contemporaneous explanation of agency action. 411 U.S. at 143, 93 S.Ct. 1241. Nor has the utility of informal findings as a device for determining whether various relevant factors were administratively considered been lost upon the lower federal courts. See, e. g., Environmental Defense Fund v. Ruckelshaus, 142 U.S.App.D.C. 74, 439 F.2d 584, 597–8 (1971);[26] Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corporation v. FPC, 160 U.S.App.D.C. 1, 488 F.2d 1325, 1330 (1973). Accord, Dry Colors, supra at 105–6. Cf. National Nutritional Food Ass'n v. FDA, 491 F.2d 1141, 1145 n. 5 (2d Cir. 1974); Scott, In Quest of Reason, supra.

[12] The parties in this case have clashed sharply on the question whether the Commission made any informal findings or whether the "stated justification for informal action does not provide an adequate basis for judicial review." Camp v. Pitts, supra 411 U.S. at 138, 93 S.Ct.

[25] Administrative findings were required by statute in Burlington by 5 U.S.C. § 1007(b) (now 5 U.S.C. § 557(c)(3)(A)). No such formal findings are mandated in the instant action. Allegheny-Ludlum Steel, supra. However, the Court's articulation of the important function of administrative findings in Burlington was far broader than that required by the relevant statute and thus Burlington is not read as limited to situations where formal findings are required after a hearing "on the record" under 5 U.S.C. § 557(c)(3)(A). Compare Overton Park, supra and Camp v. Pitts, supra with Allegheny-Ludlum Steel, supra.

[26] In EDF v. Ruckelshaus, supra, the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals stated that: "We stand on the threshhold of a new era in the history of the long and fruitful collaboration of administrative agencies and reviewing courts. For many years . . . [c]ourts occasionally asserted, but less often exercised, the power to set aside agency action on the ground that an impermissible factor had entered into the decision, or a crucial factor had not been considered. Gradually, however, that power has come into more frequent use, and with it, the requirements that administrators articulate the factors on which they base their decisions." 439 F.2d at 597.

at 1242. Plaintiffs claim that the Commission made no findings and rendered no "contemporaneous explanation" of Commission action in adoption of the LB Program. The Commission however claims that there are findings.[27] These, according to the Commission, include letters issued by the Commission in connection with its denials of motions to quash its Order to File Form LB[28] (September 24, 1974), a statement by the Commission denying plaintiffs' renewed motions to quash[29] (January 7, 1975), two staff reports[30] prepared in March and May of 1974[31] and a letter from Commissioner Lewis Engman to Senator Philip A. Hart dated May 15, 1974.[32] The Court disagrees and concludes it is unable to treat these materials as "contemporaneous explanations" of the Commission's August 2, 1974 adoption of the LB Program.

The two staff reports are not explanations by the Commission, but rather by its staff.[33] Further, they were prepared prior to the August 2, 1974 promulgation of the LB Program and are thus unfit for treatment as contemporaneous informal findings by the Commission. Similarly, the May 15, 1974 Engman[1011]-Hart letter cannot be considered as constituting Commission findings because it issued some two and one-half months before the Commission adopted its LB Program by resolution dated August 2, 1974.[34]

The Commission responses denying the motions to quash and renewed motions to quash, while perhaps forming part of the administrative record, cf., Bradley v. Weinberger, supra at 415, cannot be treated as a "contemporaneous explanation" of the FTC's promulgation of the LB Program. Not only did they post-date the August 2nd decision by eight weeks and five months respectively, but their temporal context serves to render them susceptible to characterization as the type of "post-hoc rationalization" condemned for review purposes in Overton Park, supra 401 U.S. at 419, 91 S.Ct. 814. While these two statements could serve as findings or explanations of the Commission's reasons for denying the two sets of motions to quash, the administrative activity under review in this Court is the adoption of the LB Program, not the refusal to quash the Orders to File Form LB. "Judicial review must operate to ensure that the administrative process itself will confine and control the exercise of discretion. Courts should require administrative officers to articulate the standards and principles that govern their discretionary decisions in as much detail as possible." EDF v. Ruckelshaus, supra at 598.

[33] The distinction between statements or acts of an agency and those of its staff has in some circumstances been deemed of great significance. U. S. v. Citizens & Southern National Bank, 422 U.S. 86, 95 S.Ct. 2099, 45 L.Ed.2d 41 (1975).

[34] No opinion is expressed as to whether the Engman-Hart letter could serve as Commission findings were it issued contemporaneously with the promulgation of the LB Program.

Were reviewing courts to treat as "contemporaneous explanations" the statements of agencies issued not in conjunction with administrative action, but some time afterwards when the propriety of that action is under attack, that would amount to judicial sanctioning of administrative practice based on a principle of "act now; figure out why later." Administrative agencies cannot be free to act unfettered by any standards or parameters of authority as long as they could subsequently advance some reasons as to why the action was originally undertaken. The integrity of the administrative process is not debased, but strengthened by the requirement of contemporaneous findings. The probative character of an explanation issued contemporaneously with particular agency action is superior to a statement made when action previously taken is attacked and justifications for it are sought.

It is within the realm of discretionary administrative action that informal findings or explanations assume the greatest importance in terms of providing a principled framework, both for administrative decision-making and judicial review. See Davis, Administrative Law Text 332–4 (1972); EDF v. Ruckelshaus, supra at 597–8. "Contemporaneous" will not be stretched to reach a result fundamentally inconsistent with the purpose of requiring explanations of agency action. Accordingly, the Court finds that for purposes of judicial review there are no "contemporaneous explanations" or findings accompanying agency action sufficient to indicate what factors were considered by the Commission.

D. Remedies for a Lack of "Contemporaneous Explanations" of Administrative Action

In Overton Park the Supreme Court also held that where the bare administrative record does not disclose what factors were considered in connection with agency action, a reviewing court could properly require an explanation in order to aid its determination as to whether a challenged action was arbitrary or capricious. 401 U.S. at 420, 91 S.Ct. 814. Further, the Court also held the absence of "administrative findings that were made at the same time as the decision" would justify requiring "the administrative officials who participated in the decision to give testimony explaining their action." Id. The Court [1012] did, however, indicate the essentially limited occasions for such inquiries by requiring a "strong showing of bad faith or improper behavior" when contemporaneous findings exist to justify an examination of the decision-makers' mental processes. Id. citing U.S. v. Morgan, 313 U.S. 409, 422, 61 S.Ct. 999, 85 L.Ed. 1429 (1941).

In Camp v. Pitts, supra, the class of administrative record that justified supplementation was extended from cases in which no agency findings had been made to either those where the "stated justification for informal action does not provide an adequate basis for judicial review," 411 U.S. 138, 93 S.Ct. at 1242 or ". . . there was such failure to explain administrative action as to frustrate effective judicial review . . . ." Id. at 142-3, 93 S.Ct. at 1244. See National Nutritional Foods Ass'n v. FDA, supra at 1145, n. 5.

The Commission relies on several cases for the proposition that discovery procedures or the taking of testimony are only proper in the context of judicial review of administrative action when a showing of bad faith has been made. This reliance is misplaced. In Bradley v. Weinberger, supra, the First Circuit never reached the issue sub judice. Similarly, in Dry Colors, supra, the Third Circuit's statement with respect to the scope of judicial review expressly assumed the existence of administrative findings. See Id., 486 F.2d at 104, n. 8. Finally, both the Second and Fifth Circuit in National Nutritional Foods Ass'n v. FDA, supra at 1145 and Bank of Commerce of Laredo v. City National Bank of Laredo, 484 F.2d 284, 288 (5th Cir. 1973),[35] had specifically found that "contemporaneous explanations" of administrative action were present in both cases. Thus, the cited cases are distinguishable from the controversy at bar because of this Court's conclusion that "contemporaneous explanations" of the Commission's actions in adopting the LB Program are lacking. Supra pp. 1011-1012.

The Supreme Court did not provide explicit guidelines in either Overton Park or Camp for District Courts to follow to obtain further "explanation" for allegedly arbitrary and capricious agency action. Instead, the Court chose to defer to the fact-finding expertise of the lower federal courts and placed the specific choice of means within the discretion of the reviewing court. Compare Overton Park, supra 401 U.S. at 420-1, 91 S.Ct. 814 with Camp v. Pitts, supra 411 U.S. at 142-3, 93 S.Ct. 1241.

[13] The Commission has suggested that if this Court should find the administrative record to be inadequate because of a lack of contemporaneous explanations, a remand to the Commission would be appropriate.[36] The Court is unwilling to adopt this suggestion for the following reasons. In Overton Park the Supreme Court counseled strongly against the use of "post-hoc rationalizations" to reveal the basis of prior [35] Bank of Commerce of Laredo, supra, has been described as a "remarkably obtuse opinion." Scott, In Quest of Reason, 42 Chi.L.Rev. 235, 266 (1975). administrative acts. 401 U.S. at 419–21, 91 S.Ct. 814. Further, special warning with regard to the "post-hoc" nature of findings prepared subsequent to the actual administrative decision is found in the Court's advice that any such materials "must be viewed critically." Id. at 420, 91 S.Ct. 814. This Court is similarly sensitive to the unsatisfactory dynamics of such a remand and accordingly deems it unwise in the instant controversy.

By contrast, utilization of the discovery procedures available under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, albeit to a limited extent, appears to provide a more satisfactory, and entirely appropriate,[37] means of uncovering the [1013] rationale behind the Commission's adoption of the LB Program.[38] In particular, the adversarial nature of most discovery tools (depositions, interrogatories and requests for production) provides an ideal counter to any tendency of an agency requested to unilaterally prepare post-hoc findings to place a highly refined and, perhaps unwarranted, gloss upon prior decision-making.

[14,15] While discovery is appropriate, it will not necessarily be permitted to be as time consuming as the more common types of plenary actions. The scope of discovery under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is generally governed by Rule 26(b)(1) which provides that: "Parties may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action . . . ." In general the notion of relevance inherent in Rule 26(b)(1) has been given a very broad scope. 4 Moore's Federal Practice ¶ 26.56[1] at 26–131. Relevance is to be measured, not according to the specific issues raised by the pleadings, but rather by reference to the nature of the subject matter. See Id. at 26–120–22. Against this liberal standard for delimiting the parameters of discovery stands the caveat of the Supreme Court in Overton Park that: "If the District Court decides that additional explanation is necessary, that court should consider which method will prove the most expeditious so that full review may be had as soon as possible." 401 U.S. at 420–1, 91 S.Ct. at 826. In reviewing administrative decisions, it is held that the usual broad scope of discovery is subject to restriction in order that

But see note 35 supra.

[38] While the actual discovery eventually had in this matter will be limited solely to curing the lack of a "contemporaneous explanation" of administrative action, this serves adequately to distinguish the instant pre-enforcement review from an action brought to enforce agency action. In such a proceeding the judicial focus is not directed towards a searching inquiry of the bases upon which an agency has acted. Instead, attention is focused upon the particular order sought to be enforced. As a result the degree and nature of any discovery in an enforcement proceeding is wholly distinguishable from the broad review here undertaken by the Court where discovery is being utilized to remedy the lack of administrative findings necessary to effectuate a complete and searching review of administrative action. A. O. Smith et al. v. FTC et al., 396 F.Supp. at 1115, 1116 (D.Del.1975). See U. S. v. Associated Merchandising Corp., 256 F.Supp. 318 (S.D.N.Y.1966). Cf. Donaldson v. United States, 400 U.S. 517, 528–9 and n. 11, 91 S.Ct. 534, 27 L.Ed.2d 580 (1971); United States v. Howard, 360 F.2d 373 (3d Cir. 1966).

such review may be had promptly. Accordingly, whatever further discovery may eventually be had in this action will be of an essentially limited nature and should be framed in a manner consistent with the narrow purposes of such discovery.[39]

II. THE COMMISSION'S CLAIMS OF EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE

[1014] Plaintiffs, first through requests for production, and now by motion to compel, seek access to 209 Commission documents identified and briefly described in Hubler Deposition Exhibit No. 50.[40] The Commission in turn responded by raising claims of executive privilege with respect to 129 documents and arguing that all the documents are nondiscoverable on relevance grounds. The privilege claims attaching to 10 documents or portions of those documents have now been mooted by release in a contemporaneous, but unrelated, agency decision in a Freedom of Information Act proceeding.

Executive privilege also reared its head in the context of a deposition taken by plaintiffs of a member of the Commission staff. These claims initially arose when the employee was directed by Commission counsel not to answer 17 questions on the ground that executive privilege attached to the subject matter sought to be disclosed by plaintiffs' deposition questions.[41]

By letter[42] dated June 10, 1975 Lewis A. Engman, Chairman, FTC, purported to formally raise the privilege claims with regard to the [39] It is noted a conflict appears to exist when the concept of a "searching and careful" judicial inquiry is placed against the restriction of such review to a record which consists solely of materials actually employed by administrative decision-makers in undertaking the acts subsequently under review. Due to the size of most administrative agencies, a high degree of responsibility is often delegated to staff members. Thus, in preparing a report to be utilized by the decision-makers, an administrative staff member might rely upon statistical or technological data gathered by the agency. Since the report thereafter submitted to the agency will not contain such data, but merely rely upon it, that data does not ordinarily become part of the administrative record. Because such data might itself be totally incorrect or otherwise invalid, both the staff's and decision-maker's reliance is misplaced. However, since such materials are not part of the record there is no readily apparent way to discover that the data is misleading or incorrect. In an ordinary civil action such lacunae would be uncovered through utilization of the liberal discovery procedures authorized by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. In suits involving judicial review of administrative action such discovery possibly cannot ordinarily be had due to the lack of relevance under Rule 26(b)(1) caused by the fact that neither the data nor its weaknesses can be employed by a court when review is limited to the administrative record.

Alternative resolutions of the foregoing conflict might include enlarging the administrative record for this limited purpose to include staff reports indirectly relied upon by the agency decision makers or utilizing discovery procedures notwithstanding the "relevance" problem under Fed.R.Civ.Proc. 26(b)(1).

[40] See Docket No. 46. There are a total of 294 separate documents listed in Hubler Deposition Exhibit No. 50. In a separate Freedom of Information Act proceeding the Commission has agreed to allow a member of the public access to 125 of these documents, and concurrently agreed to make them similarly available to the plaintiffs in the instant case. However, some of the documents released pursuant to the independent Freedom of Information Act request were never requested by plaintiffs.

[41] Docket No. 54, Exhibits A through M.

[42] The contents of the letter is as follows:

"Re: A. O. Smith Corporation, et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, et al., Civil Action No. 75-15—FTC File 99-199
Dear Judge Schwartz:

Plaintiffs in the above-captioned action have moved the court for an order compelling the Federal Trade Commission to produce certain documents listed in Hubler Deposition Exhibit 50 and to permit Myron J. Hubler to answer certain questions asked of him during the taking of his deposition to which Commission counsel objected and directed Mr. Hubler not to answer. (The questions are set forth in Exhibits A through M to plaintiffs' motion.)

I am hereby formally claiming the Commission's privilege for intra-governmental documents reflecting advisory Hubler documents, as well as reiterating the privilege claims emanating from the Hubler deposition itself. The letter, which was not submitted as an affidavit, gives no reasons as to how or why the Commission would be harmed through disclosure of either the documents or the information sought by the deposition questions. Nor does the letter give any indication that Commissioner Engman made the decision to invoke executive privilege after personal consideration of the documents and their content.

A. Executive Privilege in General

[16] The Commission has labeled the privilege it is raising as the privilege against disclosure of intra-agency advis[1015]ory opinions, recommendations and deliberations. Since describing the privilege in these terms creates a substantial risk of confusion with a Freedom of Information Act provision[43] which exempts from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandum or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency," the privilege raised by the Commission under Rule 26[44] will instead be described as executive privilege. Cf. U. S. v. Article of Drug, 43 F.R.D. 181, 190 (D.Del.1967). The purpose behind the executive privilege against disclosure of intra-agency advisory communications is the encouragement of frank discussion within the government as regards the formulation of policy. U. S. v. Berrigan, 482 F.2d 171, 181 (3d Cir. 1973). This is because "human experience teaches that those who expect public dissemination of their remarks may well temper candor with a concern for appearances . . . to the detriment of the decision-making process." U. S. v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 705, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 3106, 41 L.Ed.2d 1039 (1974). Accord, Ackerly v. Ley, 137 U.S.App.D.C. 133, 420 F.2d 1336, 1341 (1969) ("there are enough incentives as it is for playing it safe and listing with the wind"). See also, NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 95 S.Ct. 1504, 44 L.Ed.2d 29 (1975).

[17] This privilege is not absolute, U. S. v. Nixon, supra, but instead is subject to at least two significant qualifications. First, the privilege opinions, recommendations and deliberations as to the following documents identified in Hubler Deposition Exhibit 50: Hubler Documents 1-4, 7-12, 15-57, 21-22, 25, 29-30, 33, 35-37, 39-41, 45, 48-50, 56-58, 63, 66-68, 70, 72-75, 77, 79-80, 105, 117, 130, 134, 138, 142, 144, 151, 159-161, 164, 166-68, 171, 176, 195-210, 223-225, 227-229, 238, 239, 241, 243, 246, 250, 252-257, 261-294.

I am also raising the privilege for intra-governmental communications reflecting advisory opinions, recommendations and deliberations with respect to the questions indicated in Exhibits A through M to plaintiffs' motion.

Respectfully,
/s/ Lewis A. Engman
Lewis A. Engman
Chairman

[43] 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5).

[44] Rule 26 allows discovery of any relevant matter not privileged from disclosure. See note 10, supra.

does not attach to purely factual communications within or between agencies, the disclosure of which would not compromise military or state secrets. E.P.A. v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87-8, 93 S.Ct. 827, 35 L.Ed.2d 119 (1973). Moreover, factual material contained in deliberative memoranda has generally been held discoverable if susceptible to severance from its context. Id. See e.g., Machin v. Zuckert, 114 U.S.App.D.C. 335, 316 F.2d 336, cert. denied 375 U.S. 896, 84 S.Ct. 172, 11 L.Ed.2d 1214 (1963); Boeing Airplane Co., v. Coggeshall, 108 U.S.App.D.C. 106, 280 F.2d 654 (1960); Freeman v. Seligson, 132 U.S.App.D.C. 56, 405 F.2d 1326 (1968). Cf. Committee for Nuclear Responsibility, Inc. v. Seaborg, 149 U.S.App.D.C. 393, 463 F.2d 788, 792 (1971). The same distinction is applied under the analogous Freedom of Information Act provision, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). Soucie v. David, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 144, 448 F.2d 1067 (1971); Schwartz v. IRS, 511 F.2d 1303 (D.C. Cir. 1975).[45]

[18] Secondly, even those materials actually encompassed within the limited confines of the privilege are not absolutely exempted from disclosure. Instead, the privilege can be overridden in appropriate circumstances. See, e.g., U. S. v. Nixon, supra; Black v. Sheraton Corp., 371 F.Supp. 97 (D.D.C.1974). While the exact showing necessary to surmount a governmental claim of privilege is unclear,[46] what is basically involved in each case is an ad hoc balancing of individual need for the materials against the harm resulting from any such disclosure. In fact, it is this as[1016]sessment of individual need that most completely distinguishes adjudications of executive privilege under the Freedom of Information Act, where an individual's need for materials is deemed irrelevant. SEC v. National Student Marketing Corp., 18 Fed.Rules Serv.2d 1302, 1308 (D.D.C.1974). See generally, Note, "The Freedom of Information Act and the Exemption for Intra-Agency Memoranda." 86 Harv.L.Rev. 1047 (1972).

[19,20] As with any privilege the burden is upon the claimant of executive privilege to demonstrate a proper entitlement to exemption from disclosure. Accord, U. S. v. Article of Drug, supra. Cf. International Paper Company v. Fibreboard Corporation, 63 F.R.D. 88, 93 (D.Del.1974). To properly support a claim of executive privilege at least three requirements must be satisfied. First, the privilege must be claimed by the head of the applicable agency after actual personal [45] While it is clear that the fifth exemption of the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) in no way affects the scope of materials discoverable in plenary civil actions, 4 Moore's Federal Practice ¶ 26.61 [4.3] at 26-277 (1974 ed.); Pleasant Hill Bank v. U. S., 58 F.R.D. 97, 100 (W.D.Mo. 1973), cases construing that Freedom of Information Act exemption are readily analogous to cases where executive privilege is being examined under the aegis of Rule 26 discovery proceedings.

consideration by that officer. U. S. v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1, 7-8, 73 S.Ct. 528, 97 L.Ed. 727 (1953). Secondly, there must be "a specific designation and description of the documents" claimed to be privileged. Black v. Sheraton, supra. This is necessary in order that a court be able to make a knowledgable decision as to whether any document or portion thereof actually contains advisory or deliberative materials. Any attempts to invoke executive privilege in the absence of this specific factual showing are actually attempts to interfere with the proper functioning of the judicial branch of our government by appropriating the means of this decision to the executive branch. Cf. U. S. v. Nixon, supra. Finally, there must be a demonstration of "precise and certain reasons for preserving" the confidentiality of the governmental communications. Black v. Sheraton, supra. A close reading of cases where claims of executive privilege were raised indicates that the necessary facts have generally been required to be raised by affidavit. See, e.g., U. S. v. Reynolds, supra; Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. V.E.B. Carl Zeiss, Jena, 40 F.R.D. 318 (D.D.C.1966), aff'd sub nom., V.E.B. Carl Zeiss, Jena v. Clark, 128 U.S.App.D.C. 10, 384 F.2d 979 (1967), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 952, 88 S.Ct. 334, 19 L.Ed.2d 361 (1967); Black v. Sheraton Corporation, supra. Further, this Court requires the factual basis for other privilege claims to be made by affidavit. International Paper Company v. Fibreboard Corporation, supra, 63 F.R.D. at 94. However, for reasons that will shortly appear, it is unnecessary to decide whether the factual showing necessary to support a claim of executive privilege must be made by affidavit.[47]

B. The Hubler Documents

For a variety of reasons, the Court finds itself unable to properly adjudicate the Commission's claims of executive privilege. Moreover, it is held that the Commission has yet to raise any executive privilege claims whatsoever because of certain serious deficiencies in the manner the Commission has chosen to press these claims.

[21,22] While the Commission has fulfilled the requirement that executive privilege be raised by the head of an agency,[48] U. S. v. Reynolds, supra, it has failed to satisfactorily comply with at least two other requirements. First, the [1017] "specific designation and description of the documents," Black v. Sheraton Corporation, supra, is

[47] See discussion, infra pp. 1016–1018.

[48] Plaintiffs have challenged whether the Chairman of the FTC is the "head" of the Commission for purposes of asserting executive privilege claims with arguments that the Chairman is not able to act on behalf of the Commission as a whole. The Court finds this argument to be unpersuasive because neo-literal compliance with the requirement that an agency head act in this context is unnecessary. That requirement was designed to deter governmental units from too freely claiming a privilege that is not to be lightly invoked, U. S. v. Reynolds, supra, by assuring that some one in a position of high authority could examine the materials involved from a vantage point involving both expertise and an overview-type perspective. It is impossible to suggest that allowing the FTC Chairman to raise these claims will undermine the purposes behind this requirement.

lacking in several crucial respects. The Commission did, through Chairman Engman's letter, specify the particular documents claimed as privileged from disclosure. In addition, the record does contain a document[49] which provides some information on each document in terms of its general inter-agency routing, its date of preparation and its title. However, little or no information is provided as to the actual content of various documents. Since it is clear that excisable factual portions are, if relevant, discoverable, and since certain documents[50] appear, upon reading the attenuated descriptions, to contain largely factual material, the failure to fully describe the documents precludes the Court from any informed analysis of what documents, or portions thereof, actually contain the type of advisory communications protected by the privilege. Similarly, the lack of specificity renders an assessment of the potential harm resulting from disclosure impossible, thereby preventing the Court from balancing such harm against plaintiffs' needs to determine whether to override any claims of privilege.

The second serious deficiency in the Commission's approach is its total failure to proffer "precise and certain" reasons for preserving the confidentiality of the requested documents. Black v. Sheraton Corporation, supra. Without such information, a court cannot employ the balancing process appropriate to a resolution of this controversy. While the Court notes its serious doubts as to whether plaintiffs will be able to demonstrate a level of need sufficient to overcome executive privilege with respect to these documents,[51] until the Court can find that reasons exist for shielding these materials from disclosure because they contain advisory communications, no further adjudication of these claims can occur.

These deficiencies, when combined with Chairman Engman's total and absolute failure to indicate that he had engaged in any personal review of these documents,[52] are sufficient to support a finding that the Commission has yet to raise any executive privilege with respect to these documents. This is because an improperly raised claim of privilege is no privilege at all. Black v. Sheraton Corporation, supra at 101; International Paper Company v. Fibreboard Corporation, supra at 93. Thus, the Court would be totally justified at this juncture in ruling against the Commission on its claims of executive privilege, particularly in view of the fact that the Commission was previously made aware of the shortcomings inherent in its prior attempts to raise executive privilege as a barrier to discovery.[53] However, because the public interest is a factor to be considered in determining the proper scope of discovery, 4 Moore's Federal Practice ¶ 26.60[3] (1972 ed.), it is concluded the public interest would not be served at this point by a finding that no privilege attaches to these documents as a result of the Commission's [1018] inability to properly raise its claims. Therefore, the Commission will be allowed a final "third bite[54] at the apple" on its executive privilege claim.

[51] See note 55, infra.

[52] Although an inference could be drawn that Chairman Engman did indeed examine the documents prior to asserting his claim of executive privilege, the Court is unwilling to indulge in such speculation. Not only does the unverified character of the Engman letter make attempts to raise inferences somewhat troublesome, but the commission itself argued in its briefs that providing greater specificity with respect to the documents would moot the claims of burden it has also raised as a bar to this discovery. Thus, the exact opposite inference, namely that no one at the Commission has examined these documents, may well be the more appropriate inference.

The Commission will be required to mend all the multitudinous flaws that currently beset its claims of executive privilege. Central to this task will be completion of a descriptive, full and specific itemization of the various documents being claimed as privileged. Further, the basis for every claim of privilege will have to be shown to enable proper judicial resolution of these questions. Finally, if any portions of the putatively privileged documents contain factual information, the Commission will have to demonstrate the impossibility of extricating those factual portions. As a last resort, to the extent that greater illumination of documentary contents cannot occur without essentially disclosing the actual privileged contents, the Commission will have to submit any such documents for in camera review by the Court. Contemporaneously, the plaintiffs will be allowed further opportunity to demonstrate their need for such documents bearing in mind the close relationship between need, relevance and the scope of review in this action.[55]

C. The Hubler Deposition

[23] The decisional posture of the remaining privilege claims raised during the taking of the Hubler deposition is similar to that taken with respect to the documents claimed as privileged. While no greater specificity is needed in this context because the deposition questions claimed to invade the province of protected advisory communications speak for themselves, the failure to articulate "precise and certain reasons for preserving their confidentiality," Black v. Sheraton

---

[53] At a hearing on March 3, 1975 the Court, in denying a prior Commission motion for a protective order, ruled that the Commission had failed to properly invoke executive privilege. (Transcript 68, March 3, 1975.)

[54] See note 52, supra.

[55] The plaintiffs have a significant burden with respect to demonstrating the requisite showing of need sufficient to overcome any properly raised claim of executive privilege. It appears possible to describe the material sought by plaintiffs as falling within three classes of documents. First, some of the documents sought appear to be part of the administrative record and as such will, of course, be made available to plaintiffs. Other documents do not appear to have been considered by the Commissioners and thus cannot be part of the administrative record. Since review in this case is confined to the record, it is difficult to understand how plaintiff could ever demonstrate any level of need for such items because, at the very least, documents belonging to this class would then fall outside the proper scope of discovery under Fed.R.Civ.Proc. 26(b). Finally a third category of documents may exist. This category consists of materials which were not directly considered by the Commissioners, but which may have been indirectly relied upon by the Commissioners in promulgating the LB Program. If such materials exist, plaintiffs may have an argument that they should be made available either as part of the administrative record or through discovery. See note 39, supra.

Corporation, supra, once again precludes utilization of the requisite balancing test. Thus, even though the subject-matter sought to be elicited by the various questions is within the class of intra-agency communications designed to be protected by executive privilege, the Court can go no further without some information, other than its sua sponte speculation, U. S. v. Article of Drug, supra, as to the quantum and type of harm that would result from forced disclosure of these communications. Therefore, with respect to the questions asked, it is held executive privilege was improperly invoked and therefore not available to the Commission.

[24] Plaintiffs have argued that executive privilege was waived during taking of Hubler's deposition by the Commission counsel's practice of employing the privilege in a "one-way" fashion, i.e., allowing the witness to divulge the contents of his advisory communications to others but not allowing the witness to relate the responses received by the witness. The Commission has countered by arguing that little damage to the public interest occurs when a government employee is permitted to reveal the substance of his (or her) communications, as long as the employee is prevented from divulging the communications of [1019] others. This view of executive privilege is unacceptable. The purpose of this privilege is to promote frank and honest discussion within government agencies during the formulation of policy. If the privilege only attached to what one hears from others, as opposed to what one says to others, the privilege would be rendered meaningless since the purpose behind the rule would have evaporated. Moreover, given the Commission's view of the privilege in this context, one could always discover the total content of various intra-agency communications simply by deposing every participant to a particular conversation and obtaining information as to what that individual communicated to others. Therefore, if executive privilege had been properly invoked, the Commission would be deemed to have waived the privilege with respect to two specific questions[56] by allowing the witness to respond to prior questions in which the substance of the witness' advisory communications were divulged.

[25] Neither the Commission's failure to properly demonstrate the existence of executive privilege nor its inadvertent waiver of the privilege with respect to two specific questions requires the Court to compel answers by Mr. Hubler. This is because Mr. Hubler's views have no relevance to the ultimate review to be undertaken by the Court in this action, as such review, with limited exceptions, will be confined solely to the administrative record.[57]

III. ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

[26] The Commission has also sought to raise the attorney-client privilege with respect to two of the documents sought by plaintiff. The contours of this privilege in this district were recently enunciated in International Paper Company v. Fibreboard Corporation, supra where it was held that:

> "The privilege applies only if (1) the asserted holder of the privilege is or sought to become a client; (2) the person to whom the communication was made (a) is a member of the bar of a court, or his subordinate and (b) in connection with this communication is acting as a lawyer; (3) the communication relates to a fact of which the attorney was informed (a) by his client (b) without the presence of strangers (c) for the purpose of securing primarily either (i) an opinion on law or (ii) legal services or (iii) assistance in some legal proceeding, and not (d) for purposes of committing a crime or tort; and (4) the privilege has been (a) claimed and (b) not waived by the client."

63 F.R.D. at 93, citing U. S. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 89 F.Supp. 357, 358-9 (D.Mass.1950). While the Commission did submit an affidavit setting forth the facts upon which the attorney-client privilege claim is based, two elements necessary to justify the imposition of the privilege appear to be lacking. First, there is no showing that the documents contain any facts which had previously been communicated to Commission counsel. Secondly, the apparently wide distribution of these documents within the Commission renders it difficult to conclude that the original information conveyed, if any, was communicated in a confidential manner. Accordingly, the attorney-client privilege will not shield Documents Nos. 167 and 168.

IV. THE COMMISSION'S MOTION FOR A PROTECTIVE ORDER

[27] The Commission's motion for a protective order is granted predicated [1020] upon a finding that "good cause" has been demonstrated to prevent the taking of depositions from certain Commission officials. While the Court has rejected both the Commission's argument that the taking of these depositions would disrupt the LB Program's functioning and the contention that the depositions are inappropriate because this is an enforcement proceeding, the Commission has correctly asserted that no purpose is served by continuing the depositions of Commission officials. This is because the scope of review in this matter, confined with only limited exceptions, to the administrative record, renders such discovery improper and irrelevant. See Elm

[57] The Commission earlier sought a protective order against the taking of Mr. Hubler's deposition. Other than an improperly raised claim by counsel of executive privilege, the Commission's sole argument in support of its motion was that such discovery was improper because this was an enforcement proceeding. No contention was properly urged that such discovery was improper because lacking in relevance to the scope of review.

Grove Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Federal Home Loan Bank Board, 391 F.Supp. 1041, 1043 (E.D.Wis.1975). It is therefore unnecessary to deal with the Commission's request that the Court certify this question under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).[58]

CONTROL DATA CORPORATION ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

Civ. A. No. 4-74-Civ. 412. F.T.C. Docket No. 8940.

(United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, October 2, 1975)

On motion of plaintiff for preliminary injunction, Court held that the "usual expense and annoyance" of litigation are not such "irreparable injury" as will justify a preliminary injunction.

Motion denied.

Before LARSON, District Judge.

Plaintiffs here are respondents in an administrative proceeding currently pending before the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) for alleged violations of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, in the conduct of their respective electronic data processing vocational education programs. A summary of those proceedings from March 1971 to January 1974 can be found in this Court's Order and Memorandum in a prior case between the present parties. Control Data Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, No. 4-74-Civ. 25 (D. Minn. Feb. 28, 1974).

The complaint in this case was filed on August 23, 1974. Jurisdiction is invoked pursuant to 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(a)(3), 702, 704, and 706, and 28 U.S.C. § 1361. With the complaint plaintiffs filed a motion for a preliminary injunction. Oral argument on the motion was heard on September 16, 1974. For the reasons set out below, that motion must be denied.

The complaint incorporates by reference much of the recent administrative record in the FTC proceeding. That record indicates that on February 7, 1974, plaintiffs filed with the administrative law judge a request for issuance of a subpoena directed to certain information within the control of the FTC; that on March 11, 1974, that request was granted in part and denied in part; that on March 19, 1974, plaintiffs submitted a petition to the Secretary of the FTC requesting disclosure pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552 of five classes of information that had been denied in the Order of March 11. The five classes of information sought were:

"(b) When a district judge, in making in a civil action an order not otherwise appealable under this section, shall be of the opinion that such order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation, he shall so state in writing in such order. The Court of Appeals may thereupon, in its discretion, permit an appeal to be taken from such order, if application is made to it within ten days after the entry of the order. . . ."

> (1) Names and addresses of all persons, other than FTC staff, having knowledge of any of the allegations in the complaint before the Commission;
> (2) Records of every committee, group, or task force, on which the FTC participated, which studied private vocational education in the United States at any time since 1969;
> (3) The membership of each committee, group, or task force described in (2);
> (4) Records relating to revisions or amendment of the FTC's guidebook "Our Vocational Training Can Guarantee You the Job of a Lifetime";
> (5) Various records relating to development and preparation of "Guide 10(e)" of the FTC's "Guides for Private Vocational and Home Study Schools."

On May 23, 1974, the Secretary agreed to produce a small portion of the documents requested and refused to produce the remainder. On June 10, 1974, he advised plaintiffs that they would be allowed to inspect the documents produced pursuant to the May 23 letter only after payment of a "search and segregation fee" of $183.00. The complaint and the motion for a preliminary injunction seek an Order compelling production of the documents requested of the Secretary and enjoining defendants from requiring payment of any search and segregation fees in connection with production of those documents.

Factors to be considered on a motion for a preliminary injunction are "(1) the significance of the threat of irreparable harm to plaintiff if the injunction is not granted; (2) the state of the balance between this harm and the injury that granting the injunction would inflict on defendant; (3) the probability that plaintiff will succeed on the merits; and (4) the public interest." 11 Wright and Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 2948, at 430–431. The most important of these factors, essential to obtaining a preliminary injunction, is the threat of irreparable harm if the injunction is not granted. Id., at 430–438.

In the earlier litigation between these parties, this Court denied plaintiffs' motions for preliminary and permanent injunctions enjoining the administrative proceedings until the FTC produced certain documents then in dispute. The Court held in its Order and Memorandum of February 28, 1974, that plaintiffs had not made a showing of "irreparable injury" sufficient to stay the administrative proceedings. The setting of the present motion differs from that in the earlier case in that only production of documents, not a stay on the administrative proceedings, is sought. However, the Court holds that the test of "irreparable injury" is the same in both circumstances. In his affidavit in support of the present motion, counsel for plaintiffs claims that denial of the preliminary injunction will make it impossible to prepare adequately a defense to the administrative complaint. A very similar contention was considered and rejected in No. 4-74-Civ. 25 (Order and Memorandum of February 28, 1974, at 7-8). The Court's discussion there is fully applicable here. In brief, the "usual expense and annoyance" of litigation are not such "irreparable injury" as will justify a preliminary injunction.

It should be noted that in denying the preliminary injunction for failure to show irreparable injury, the Court expresses no view on the merits of the action.

Accordingly, upon all the records, files, and proceedings herein,

IT IS ORDERED:

That plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction is denied.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. J.B. WILLIAMS CO., INC.*

No. 70 Civ. 1589 F.T.C. Docket 8547

(United States District Court, Southern District of New York, October 24, 1975)

After in camera inspection of documents in a civil penalties suit, Court directed that F.T.C. furnish particular documents to defense counsel while denying discovery of other documents pursuant to Exemption 5 of the Freedom of Information Act.

Paul J. Curran, Patricia M. Hynes, Frederick P. Shaffer, New York, N.Y., for plaintiff.

Powell Pierpont, Hughes Hubbard & Reed, New York, N.Y., Charles A. Horsky, John Vanderstar, Covington & Burling, Washington, D.C., Henry E. Schultz, New York, N.Y. for defendant.

Before PIERCE, District Judge:

OPINION AND ORDER

Defendant in this civil penalty action moved for an order compelling discovery of certain documents pursuant to Rule 37(a), Fed. R. Civ. P. By order of this Court dated July 2, 1975, the motion was referred to Magistrate Raby. The Magistrate's report was received by this Court on September 9, 1975. That report stated that of the seven categories of documents requested by defendant, three categories were no longer at issue. As to the four remaining categories, the Magistrate concluded that all documents sought were immune from disclosure by virtue of Exemption 5 of the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5).

* Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported Trade Reg. Rep. ¶60,605 at 67,664 (1975-2 Trade Cases). See also pp. 438 and 938 herein. For case before the Commission, see 68 F.T.C. 481; modified 72 F.T.C. 865, 74 F.T.C. 1620, 1632.

The Magistrate reached this conclusion after having ordered in camera review of documents in Category One; he did not review documents in Categories Three, Six or Seven.

Counsel for defendant filed timely objections to the recommendations of the Magistrate, and those objections were received by this Court on September 18, 1975. On September 22, 1975 this Court issued an order to counsel for plaintiff, directing production of the relevant documents for in camera review. The order further directed counsel for plaintiff to furnish the Court with an affidavit of a person with personal knowledge to the effect that all documents described in Document Categories One, Six and Seven required by law to be disclosed as policy of the Federal Trade Commission related to this case had been in fact furnished to defendant. In an affidavit filed October 3, 1975, counsel for plaintiff declined to supply such a statement, stating that such a statement called for a legal conclusion to which neither counsel nor any employee of the Commission was competent to swear under oath. On October 8, the Court directed counsel for plaintiff to comply with the order of September 22, 1975. Thereafter, on October 10, 1975, counsel for plaintiff provided the Court with an affidavit listing six documents which had been sent to defendant and stating that said documents constitute all documents required by law to be disclosed as policy of the Commission related to this case. By October 16, 1975, all documents in the possession of the plaintiff described in Documents Categories One, Three, Six and Seven had been produced for review in camera. The Court has carefully reviewed fifteen different documents in Category One, and directs that three of those documents be furnished to defendant in that they constitute "final opinions" of an agency and "instructions to staff that affect a member of the public." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2)(A) and (C). As regards the other twelve documents in Category One, the Court concludes that they are immune from disclosure as predecisional intra-agency memoranda. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). As regards Category Three, the Court concludes that all twenty-three documents in that category are immune from disclosure by virtue of § 552(b)(5), § 552(b)(7) and the rule of Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495 (1947). Categories Six and Seven, treated by all parties as one category, contain nineteen documents. The Court concludes that these documents are predecisional intra-agency memoranda immune from disclosure by virtue of § 552(b)(5). A discussion of the nature of the documents and the applicable law follows.

Category One

In its original request to produce, defendant asked for copies of all records in the possession, custody, or control of plaintiff or of the Federal Trade Commission which were prepared during the period from November 24, 1967 to and including November 28, 1969, and which consist of (1) instructions or directives from the Commission or members thereof to any employee of the Commission relating to interpretation of or compliance with the modified cease and desist order issued by the Commission on November 24, 1967, against defendant. However, plaintiff then refused to produce said documents, relying upon 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) and (7). The documents produced for the inspection of the Court under Category One fall into six subcategories:

a. Direction by the Commission to various staff personnel to prepare drafts of documents for Commission consideration. (Nos. 1, 6, 7, 9, 13, 15).

b. Direction by the Commission that certain alterations be made in drafts of documents currently under consideration. (Nos. 4, 4a, 8, 10, 12, 14).

c. Opinions and requests of various individual Commissioners. (Nos. 7, 15).

d. Direction by the Commission to the staff to conduct an investigation. (No. 11).

e. Direction by the Commission to the staff to perform certain acts in preparation for a public hearing and the procedures to be followed at that hearing. (Nos. 2, 3).

f. Direction by the Commission that a certain document be placed on the public record. (No. 5).

In evaluating any claim of exemption under § 552(b)(5) of the Freedom of Information Act, there are a number of general principles which must be considered. Initially, all agency documents sought are available unless specifically exempt. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 136 (1975). All of the documents at issue here were doubtless produced by an "agency" within the meaning of the Information Act, and the documents are "identifiable records" under the Act. Id. at 147.

As regards Exemption 5 (§ 552(b)(5)), which exempts "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency", the cases have evolved at least five general principles. The first is that Exemption 5 covers predecisional memoranda which are part of the deliberative process but does not exempt postdecisional memoranda which serve merely to explain a decision already made. Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 183-84 (1975); NLRB v. Sears, supra, at 152; Sterling Drug v. FTC, 450 F.2d 698, 706 (D.C. Cir. 1971). Second, Exemption 5 embraces the attorney work product privilege of Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495 (1947).

NLRB v. Sears, supra, at 154. Third, Exemption 5 protects the deliberative or policymaking process but does not exempt purely factual or scientific information. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 89 (1973).[1] Fourth, where it is clear that an agency has adopted material in an otherwise exempt document as the basis of a non-exempt decision, some courts have held that the adopted material loses its immune status. See, e.g., Sterling Drug v. FTC, 450 F.2d 698, 706-08 (D.C. Cir. 1971); American Mail Line, Ltd. v. Gulick, 411 F.2d 696 (D.C. Cir. 1968).[2] Fifth, § 552(a)(2)(A) and (C) require that each agency shall make public all "final opinions" and "administrative staff manuals and instructions to staff that affect a member of the public." Counsel for defendant urge a broad reading of this subsection, asserting that whenever the Commission instructed its staff to take any action relating to J. B. Williams Co., that act necessarily involved an instruction which affected a member of the public. However, the case law does not support this interpretation. In NLRB v. Sears, supra, the lower court held that NLRB Advice and Appeals memoranda prepared by the General Counsel of the NLRB instructing Regional Directors whether or not to file suit were "instructions" under § 552(a)(2)(C). 346 F.Supp. 751, 754 (D.D.C. 1972). However, the Supreme Court, in reversing the judgment on other grounds, did not reach the issue. NLRB v. Sears, supra, at 160 and n. 26. Instead, the Supreme Court held that NLRB Advice and Appeals Memoranda which decide not to file suit are "final opinions" under § 552(a)(2)(A) and thus nonexempt, while decisions to file suit are exempt as part of the ongoing deliberative process shielded by § 552(b)(5). Thus, it seems clear to this Court from Sears that the mandate that instructions be disclosed cannot be seen as an exception to § 552(b)(5); rather, § 552(b)(5) is a statutory exception to any of the other sections of the statute which require disclosure, including § 552(a)(2)(C).

With the guidelines of the case-law construing Exemption 5 in mind, it is clear that all documents contained in subcategories a-d of Category One supra are within the intra-agency exemption. Certainly a direction to prepare a draft of a document and instructions to work deletions and alterations into drafts are at the heart of the deliberative process within the agency. See NLRB v. Sears, supra, at 150. These documents are without a doubt a reflection of the "agency's group thinking in the process of working out its policy and determining what the law is." Id.

[1] Further, "purely factual material contained in a deliberative memoranda and severable from its context would generally be available for discovery." Id. at 88. However, see the discussion under Category Three, infra.

[2] However, the Supreme Court has indicated that this "adoption" concept must be treated with caution. It cannot be presumed that, merely because a decision reached the same result as recommended by an intra-agency memo, it follows that the memo was "adopted" as policy. Renegotiation Board, supra, at 185-86. "Indeed, release of the [inter-agency] reports on the theory that they express the reasons for the Board's decision would, in those cases in which the Board had other reasons for its decision, be affirmatively misleading." Id. at 186.

at 153, quoting Davis, The Information Act: A Preliminary Analysis, 34 U. Chi. L. Rev. 761, 797 (1967).

As for the opinions and requests of the individual commissioners, it is axiomatic that "nowhere is [the] protection [of nondisclosure] more needed than between the ultimate decision-makers within an agency." Sterling Drug v. FTC, supra, at 708. Similarly, instruction to the staff to conduct an investigation is at the very starting point of the deliberative process. Each of these documents reveals a segment of "a valuable deliberative tool" which should not be made subject to public scrutiny. See Renegotiation Board, supra, at 190.

However, the documents in subcategories e and f of Category One are clearly postdecisional. Each of these documents evidences an explanation or direction to staff based upon what has already been decided by the full Commission. Although document No. 2 in Category One, directing that a hearing be set down, is marked "confidential" and although it contains marginal notations, in the Court's judgment it is postdecisional and does not reflect the deliberative process. Document No. 3, which sets procedures for the hearing, is also postdecisional and thus not within the ambit of the intra-agency exemption. The same is true of document No. 5, which simply directs that a certain document be made public. The Court accordingly holds that these, the second, third and fifth documents supplied by the government under Category One, are postdecisional and final decisions of the Commission which must be disclosed pursuant to § 552(a)(2). All other documents in Category One are protected by the intra-agency exemption.

Category Three

In this category, defendant requests all "memoranda or reports prepared by any employee of the Commission and reporting on conferences or conversations with any representative of defendant relating to interpretation of or compliance with the modified [cease and desist] order." Pursuant to this request, counsel for plaintiff gathered relevant documents from Commission files and produced said documents for this Court's review in camera.

The Court has carefully examined the twenty-three documents; twenty-two are letters written by staff attorneys or directors of the Bureau of Deceptive Practices to the files, often with copies to other staff personnel. One letter is from a staff attorney to the Commission itself. All these letters contain recollections of the author as to meetings held with representatives of the defendant, and the overwhelming majority contain recommendations and mental impressions of the author. It is clear to the Court that these documents must be judged against the standards of Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495 (1947). The work product rule of that case is directly applicable to, and contained within, the intra-agency exemption of § 552(b)(5). NLRB v. Sears, supra, at 154.

Counsel for defendant urge that these letters and memos are discoverable because they are "purely factual" accounts of meetings, citing a string of cases which hold that Exemption 5 does not protect factual or scientific materials. However, none of those decisions are apposite; all deal with scientific facts or purely investigative data. See, e.g., EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73 (1973) (results of investigations concerning scheduled nuclear testing); Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (scientific report on supersonic transport); General Services Administration v. Benson, 415 F.2d 878 (9th Cir. 1969) (results of GSA appraisal under government contract); Machin v. Zuckert, 316 F.2d 336 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 896 (1963) (Air Force report on airplane crash.) In this case, the records of recollections of attorneys of the Federal Trade Commission engaged in compliance proceedings with the respondent cannot be characterized as "purely factual" even if they purport only to record what transpired. Rather, they are work product. Work product covers the "personal recollections" of an attorney. Hickman v. Taylor, supra, at 510. A lawyer will always "sift what he considers to be the relevant from the irrelevant facts." Id. at 511.

> Under ordinary conditions, forcing an attorney to repeat or write out all that witnesses have told him and to deliver the account to his adversary gives rise to grave dangers of inaccuracy and untrustworthiness. The practice forces the attorney to testify as to what he remembers or what he saw fit to write down. Such testimony does not qualify as evidence; and to use it for impeachment or corroborative purposes would make the attorney much less an officer of the court and more an ordinary witness. (Hickman v. Taylor, supra, at 512–13.)

In Hickman, the Supreme Court refused to allow the movant discovery of an adversary's interrogation of witnesses where the movant had not been present at the interrogation. Here defendant requests discovery of records of conversations with defendant. Defendant's agents were present at all these meetings; their own recollection is available. The fact that defendant alleges that records of these meetings will be pertinent to a good faith defense does not warrant disclosure under Hickman. The crucial fact is that defendant's agents were present.

It is undisputed that the federal government enjoys the benefit of the work product privilege in litigation. NLRB v. Sears, supra, at 154; Wu v. National Endowment for Humanities, 460 F.2d 1030, 1033 (5th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 926 (1973); International Paper Co. v. FPC, 438 F.2d 1349 (2d Cir. 1971); Olson Rug Co. v. NLRB, 291 F.2d 655 (7th Cir. 1961); see Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. V. E. B. Carl Zeiss Jena, 40 F.R.D. 318, 325 (D.D.C. 1966), aff'd, 384 F.2d 979 (D.D. Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 952 (1967).

Accordingly, the Court holds that defendant has failed to make a sufficient showing to overcome the rule of Hickman v. Taylor, and holds that all documents in Category Three are protected by the "intra-agency" exemption of § 552(b)(5).

Further, the Court notes that all these records were made in preparation for the present litigation. Thus, the Court further holds that the documents in Category Three are immune from disclosure as "investigatory files compiled for law enforcement purposes" under § 552(b)(7). See NLRB v. Sears, supra, at 164-66; Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935, 939 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 894 (1970) (concrete prospect of enforcement proceedings).

Categories Six and Seven

Under this heading defendant requested all memoranda, studies, reports or other records adopted as policy by the Commission or any official thereof or relied upon by the Commission or any official thereof with respect to interpretation of or compliance with the modified cease and desist order.

This request involves the "adoption" concept discussed above. Under this category, counsel for plaintiff produced for in camera review nineteen documents. These included staff recommendations, recommendations of the General Counsel, memoranda of law, opinions of the individual Commissioners, proposed drafts, and a letter to the Attorney General of the United States, certifying the penalty action. On the basis of the Court's discussion concerning Category One, it is clear that, standing alone, all these documents are inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda exempt from disclosure by virtue of § 552(b)(5). However, it is possible that a document, which would be exempt standing alone, may lose that status by reason of its adoption as policy by the agency. See Renegotiation Board, supra, at 189; NLRB v. Sears, supra, at 152-53.

This "adoption" concept is not inconsistent with the purpose of Exemption 5 to protect internal deliberations. Rather, the "adoption" concept is also based upon the distinction between pre-decisional deliberations and decisional documents. By forcing agencies to make public documents which constitute the true basis for a decision, the Information Act operates to prevent the development of "secret law" against which unwitting respondents may be judged. Sterling Drug, supra, at 708. Defendant urges upon the Court a broad interpretation of this "adoption" concept, pursuant to its review of the decision of the Court of Appeals in Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp. v. Renegotiation Board, 482 F.2d 710 (D.C. Cir. 1973). There the court wrote:

> [A] document which a decision-maker treats as justification for a decision communicated outside the bureaucracy to regulated parties should not be shielded from public > disclosure on the ground that it was originally prepared for purposes of predecisional consultation. (Id. at 720)

Taking the language one step further, counsel for defendant urge the Court to accept the view that even in a case where the agency does not recite that it treated such a document as a basis for its decision, if it in fact relied upon the document, that document is disclosable.

There are two problems with this position. The first is that the decision of the Court of Appeals in Grumman was reversed by the Supreme Court. Renegotiation Board, supra, 421 U.S. 168 (1975). In so doing, the Supreme Court disapproved of any broad presumption of "adoption". The decision clearly requires that there be support in the record before any conclusion regarding "adoption" is reached. Renegotiation Board, supra, at 184-90.

> It is not for us to require disclosure of documents, under the purported authority of the Act, which are not final opinions, which do not accurately set forth the reasons for the [agency's] decisions, and the disclosure of which would impinge upon the . . . predecisional process. (Id. at 192).

Further, defendant's position would require that every document relied upon by an agency in reaching a decision be subject to disclosure. Clearly, the cases speak of "adoption," not "reliance." The argument that all documents relied upon are disclosable turns Exemption 5 on its head; the more a document was part of the predecisional deliberative process, the more likely it would be subject to disclosure. This was not the intent of the Congress. See EPA v. Mink, supra, at 86.

In this Court' judgment, the proper test for assessing whether a document has been "adopted" is that set forth in Sterling Drug v. FTC, supra:

> [I]f the Commission memoranda specifically indicate that reasons for its . . . decisions are contained in one or more of the memoranda prepared by individual members of the Commission or its staff, these memoranda, or the relevant portions thereof, must also be disclosed. (Id. at 708; accord, American Mail Line v. Gulick, supra.)

In the present case, the record contains no indication that any of the documents in Category Six or Seven were adopted as policy by the Commission. In fact, counsel for plaintiff has supplied this Court with a sworn affidavit to the effect that all documents in the relevant categories required by law to be disclosed as Commission policy related to this case have been provided to the defendant. Thus, the Court concludes that none of the documents in Categories Six or Seven were "adopted" by the Commission, and holds that these documents are immune from disclosure by virtue of Exemption 5, § 552(b)(5).

Counsel for plaintiff is directed to furnish defendant with copies of the second, third and fifth documents contained in Category One of the documents produced for in camera inspection. The motion of defendant J. B. Williams Co. for an order pursuant to Rule 37(a) F. R. Civ. P. is in all other respects denied.

So ordered.

Civ. A. No. 75-H-1539. F.T.C. Docket No. 9016.

(United States District Court, Southern District of Texas, October 30, 1975)

On motion for dismissal of complaint by intervenor in case involving one respondent in F.T.C. administrative proceeding attempting to enjoin co-respondent in same proceeding from voluntarily complying with administrative subpoenas duces tecum, court held that plaintiff in this case had no standing to seek injunction because the complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

Accordingly, plaintiff's motion for temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction is denied; F.T.C. motion for summary judgment dismissing above complaint is granted.

MEMORANDUM AND OPINION

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs (hereafter sometimes referred to as "Gibson") filed suit in this Court on September 8, 1975, seeking to enjoin defendants (hereafter sometimes referred to as "Cohen") from complying voluntarily with administrative subpoenas duces tecum issued by the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC"). The subpoenas were issued in furtherance of pre-trial discovery being conducted in an adjudicative proceeding instituted as the result of a complaint filed by the FTC on February 25, 1975, which names both Gibson and Cohen as respondents. See In the Matter of Herbert Gibson, Sr., et al., Docket No. 9016 (February 25, 1975). The FTC has moved to intervene in the instant suit to challenge Gibson's efforts to impede pre-trial discovery directed at Cohen. The motion to intervene is granted, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a).

To the extent that plaintiffs' complaint is justiciable, the equities invoked therein clearly preponderate in favor of the FTC because the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Not otherwise reported. This case has been reported herein because of the F.T.C.'s participation as an intervenor therein. The decision reached revolves around F.T.C.'s role as intervenor. See also p. 1530 herein. For case before the Commission, see 87 F.T.C. 1389.

Accordingly, plaintiffs' motions for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction are denied. Additional pleadings and affidavits have been submitted to the Court amplifying the contentions of the original complaint. The failure of the complaint as amplified to state a claim dictates that the FTC's motion to dismiss should be granted. Because the complaint has been amplified, the motion to dismiss will be treated as a motion for summary judgment in accordance with the last sentence of Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b), and summary judgment is hereby granted in favor of the FTC.

II. FACTS

Gibson and Cohen are co-respondents in an adjudicative proceeding[1] now pending before an Administrative Law Judge. In the Matter of Herbert Gibson, Sr., et al., FTC Docket No. 9016 (February 25, 1975). The proceeding was initiated when the FTC filed a complaint against Gibson, Cohen and others, alleging violations by the respondents of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a),[2] and Section 2(c) of the Clayton Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 13(c).[3]

After issue was joined, the FTC attempted to secure voluntary disclosure of documents designated as pertinent through informal means. This failed[4], and on July 30, 1975, the FTC applied to the Administrative Law Judge pursuant to Rules 3.33 and 3.34, 16 C.F.R. §§ 3.33 and 3.34, for depositions and subpoenas duces tecum to compel disclosure by the respondents and others of specified documents and papers. The Hearing Examiner issued an order granting the application on August 25, 1975, and Gibson moved to nullify this order on August 29, 1975, contending that it did not satisfy the requirements of Rule 3.33(a), 16 C.F.R. § 3.33(a).[5] The Hearing Examiner denied this motion, and the subpoenas were issued with a return date of September 12,

[1] An adjudicative proceeding is a formal proceeding conducted under one or more of the statutes administered by the FTC which is required by statute to be determined on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing. 16 C.F.R. § 3.2; 15 U.S.C. § 45(b).

[2] "Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared unlawful." 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1).

[3] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid." 15 U.S.C. § 13(c).

[4] Counsel for both Gibson and Cohen notified FTC Complaint Counsel of their refusal to attempt to comply voluntarily on an informal basis. Additionally, Gibson's counsel indicated to the FTC that although he did not represent certain subsidiary Gibson stores located throughout Texas which were not respondents in No. 9016, he had been informed that these organizations would not voluntarily comply.

[5] "At any time during the course of a proceeding, whether or not issue has been joined, the Administrative Law Judge, in his discretion, may order the taking of a deposition and the production of documents by the deponent. Such order may be entered upon a showing that the deposition is necessary for purposes of discovery, and that such discovery could not be accomplished by voluntary methods. Such order may also be entered in extraordinary circumstances to preserve relevant evidence upon a showing that there is substantial reason to believe that such evidence could not be presented through a witness at the hearing. 1975. This suit was filed thereafter. Understanding this Court's role in adjudicating the instant controversy requires a brief exposition of the nature of administrative pre-trial discovery in an adjudicative proceeding before the FTC and of the role of the judiciary in reviewing the conduct of such a proceeding.

III. ADJUDICATIVE PROCEEDINGS: PRE-TRIAL DISCOVERY AND JUDICIAL REVIEW

A. Issuance of a Subpoena Duces Tecum

Pre-trial discovery in an adjudicative proceeding brought by the FTC is circumscribed by detailed agency rules. 16 C.F.R. §§ 3.31–3.39. Application for issuance of an adjudicative subpoena duces tecum, described in 16 C.F.R. § 3.34(b), requires that the requesting party submit a written request to the Administrative Law Judge, specifying the material to be produced and demonstrating the relevancy of the requested material and the reasonableness of the scope of the subpoena. 16 C.F.R. § 3.34(b)(1). A motion to quash may be filed in response to this application, Id., and the Administrative Law Judge thereafter determines the propriety of permitting the requested discovery. 16 C.F.R. § 3.35. The rules further describe the procedures to be followed during the course of the hearing on the substantive charges. 16 C.F.R. §§ 3.41–3.46. The conduct of adjudicative proceedings is governed by the above-cited regulations, in strict accordance with statutory mandate. 5 U.S.C. §§ 554–556.

B. Enforcement of a Subpoena Duces Tecum

Subpoenas issued by the FTC pursuant to an adjudication are not self-enforcing. Only courts of the United States may enforce such subpoenas upon application by the Attorney General and only in the event that the subpoenaed person does not voluntarily comply. 15 U.S.C. § 49. The respondent Cohen is thus under no present duty to comply with the subpoena.

C. Appeal of a Decision in an Adjudicative Proceeding

At the conclusion of the adjudicative hearing, a decision is rendered by the Administrative Law Judge. 16 C.F.R. § 3.51. This decision may and the requirements of due process and the rules in this part, a deposition should not be ordered when it appears that it will result in undue burden to any other party or in undue delay of the proceeding, and it should not be ordered to obtain evidence from a person relating to matters with regard to which he is expected to testify at the hearing, or to obtain evidence which there is reason to believe can be presented at a hearing without the need for deposition, or to circumvent the orderly presentation of evidence at the hearing. Depositions may be taken orally or upon written interrogatories and cross-interrogatories before any person having power to administer oaths who may be designated by the Administrative Law Judge." 16 C.F.R. § 3.33(a).

be appealed to the Commission, 16 C.F.R. § 3.52, and the Commission may adopt, modify or set aside the findings and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge. 16 C.F.R. § 3.54. Additionally, the rules provide for an interlocutory appeal of a decision by the Administrative Law Judge prior to the time of the hearing. 16 C.F.R. § 3.23(b).

Once the Commission has completed its review of the adjudicative proceedings, it decides whether cease-and-desist orders should be issued for those actions which are proved to be in violation of a statute. 15 U.S.C. § 45(b). This decision is appealable to a United States Court of Appeals, which has exclusive jurisdiction to review the orders of the FTC. 15 U.S.C. §§ 45(c) and (d). The Court of Appeals may affirm, enforce, modify or set aside orders of the Commission. Id.

Jurisdiction to review agency action taken as the result of findings of an adjudicative proceeding reposes exclusively with the United States Court of Appeals. 15 U.S.C. §§ 21(d), 45(b). As the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has emphasized, all constitutional, jurisdictional, substantive and procedural issues arising in Commission proceedings may be considered in an appeal, and this statutory right to review has long been viewed as constituting a speedy and adequate remedy at law. Frito-Lay, Inc. v. F.T.C., 380 F.2d 8, 9-10 (5th Cir. 1967). The role of courts of the United States during pre-trial discovery of an adjudicative proceeding is quite limited when no enforcement proceeding is filed by the FTC. See Papercraft Corp. v. F.T.C., 307 F. Supp. 1401 (W.D. Pa. 1970).

IV. PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT

Gibson asserts without elaboration that it has a "proprietary interest" in the records which have been subpoenaed from Cohen (and, by implication, from all others who have been requested to produce documents pertinent to Gibson in the proceeding whether or not they are respondents) and contends that it will be injured when Cohen voluntarily complies with the subpoena at the appointed time.[6] The documents in Cohen's possession that concern Gibson, and to which Gibson raises objection, are business orders appearing on "Gibson Trade Show Sheets". Gibson asserts without elaboration that these sheets automatically qualify as the property of the Gibson Trade Show, a registered assumed name of plaintiff H. R. Gibson, Sr. Plaintiff's Brief, supra at 13.

[6] The return on the subpoenas was originally scheduled for the first week of September. Because this suit was filed, and in an effort to accommodate this Court, the FTC agreed to postpone the deadline date to mid-October.

That Cohen will voluntarily comply is apparently true, but that was not Cohen's original position. As noted above, when Cohen was first approached by the FTC about informally complying without the need to request a subpoena from the Administrative Law Judge, Cohen refused to cooperate, necessitating the application for the subpoena. However, this Court is satisfied by representations of counsel for the FTC that Cohen is indeed planning to cooperate voluntarily without requiring the FTC to first seek compliance pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49. If there were some question of Cohen's voluntary compliance, this Court would dismiss Gibson's complaint as being totally hypothetical and not justiciable.

Gibson seeks to have this Court prevent Cohen from complying voluntarily and to force the FTC to attempt to enforce the subpoena via the procedures established in 15 U.S.C. § 49. Gibson contends that only if a hearing is required pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49 can it properly protect its proprietary interests and voice its Fourth and Fifth Amendment claims. Resolution of the merits of this case is reached after consideration and treatment of certain preliminary issues.

V. JURISDICTION

Plaintiffs' allegations state a cause of action which arises under the Constitution and laws of the United States. The Court therefore views jurisdiction as proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. 13 Wright, Miller & Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 3562 (1975); Atlantic Richfield Co. v. F.T.C., 398 F. Supp. 1, 7 & n.5 (S.D. Tex. 1975).[7]

VI. JUSTICIABILITY: CASE OR CONTROVERSY

This Court's jurisdiction extends only to the adjudication of cases or controversies. In this case, there is a serious question as to whether a proper case or controversy exists between Gibson and Cohen. Gibson, Cohen and others were served with similar adjudicative subpoenas. Aside from its Fifth Amendment due process contention and Fourth Amendment contention, Gibson objected to the Administrative Law Judge as to the alleged irrelevancy and overbreadth of the agency's request and also opposed discovery because of the alleged confidentiality of the material requested, objections also raised initially by counsel for Cohen.

In this suit, Gibson seeks to put distance between itself and its adjudicative proceeding co-respondent Cohen by alleging that they occupy dissimilar positions and that while Cohen has no interest in disclosing information within its files, Gibson has a very strong and protectible interest in challenging disclosure.

The Court concludes that the interests of Gibson and Cohen in the instant suit are not sufficiently adverse so as to give rise to a justiciable case or controversy. Gibson asserts on the one hand that Cohen will comply with the subpoenas issued by the FTC, but Gibson has also succeeded in persuading Cohen to withhold disclosure until such time as this suit is resolved. Cohen has filed no brief or otherwise indicated any opposition to Gibson's position.[8] It cannot be assumed that Cohen actively opposes an attempt to prevent disclosure of information which, if disclosed, could result in the imposition of statutory penalties against it as a respondent in the pending adjudicative proceeding.

[7] Plaintiffs invoked the jurisdiction of this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1332 and 1337. Jurisdiction is not proper under § 1332 because there is not complete diversity of citizenship between the named plaintiffs and named defendants. Jurisdiction is not proper under § 1337. Plaintiffs' allegations relate solely to defects in procedure which allegedly violate rules and regulations required to be promulgated by the FTC in furtherance of its administrative agency authority. 5 U.S.C. §§ 554-556.

With regard to § 1331, plaintiffs' allegations on their face raise questions about potential due process violations and unlawful search and seizure. However, while the complaint alleges that more than $10,000 is in controversy, the complaint nowhere else mentions any amount in controversy, nor do plaintiffs sue for any damages, except to pray for "such other and further relief as they may be entitled to . . . at law."

Commentators have suggested that federal question cases involving interpretation of administrative rules and regulations obviate the need for the presence of a jurisdictional amount. Davis, Administrative Law Treatise, § 23.02 at 789-91 (1970 Supp.); e.g., Rusk v. Cort, 369 U.S. 367 (1962). The Court concludes from the pleadings that jurisdiction is proper in this case under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. See generally Annotation, Jurisdiction of Federal District Court to Entertain Attacks on Federal Trade Commission's Actions, 16 A.L.R. Fed. 361 (1973).

In short, this Court concludes, as has the United States Supreme Court in another context, Moore v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education, 402 U.S. 47 (1971); cf. United States v. Johnson, 319 U.S. 302 (1943), that both plaintiffs and defendants seek the same or a similar result from this litigation. There is, therefore, no present case or controversy between them, and for that reason the defendants are hereby dismissed from this action.

VII. STANDING; SUBSTANTIVE MERITS OF THE CASE

The judicial contours of this case are therefore properly drawn to encompass only Gibson and the FTC. The real controversy is between them, and the FTC's obvious interest in the outcome coupled with Cohen's invocation of no opposition prompts this Court to grant the FTC's Rule 24(a) motion to intervene. Gibson contends that when a challenge is issued to the validity of a subpoena duces tecum such as the one issued in this case by any party with an alleged protectible interest in the documents, a Court of the United States is required to scrutinize the subpoena to determine whether the information sought is relevant and not for unauthorized purposes. Because judicial review is already provided by 15 U.S.C. § 49 in those instances where the FTC must seek judicial enforcement of a subpoena duces tecum, Gibson asks this Court to prevent Cohen from complying voluntarily so as to necessitate the filing by the FTC of a Section 49 suit.

The case as properly narrowed raises two questions:[9] (1) Can a respondent in an adjudicative proceeding challenge attempts by the FTC to gather via pre-trial discovery information about that respondent or information originally supplied by that respondent to independent business entities which is pertinent to the adjudicative proceeding and which is in the files of such entities?[10] (2) Can a federal district court require the FTC to seek judicial enforcement of an administrative subpoena duces tecum via 15 U.S.C. § 49, when it would otherwise not have to do so, by issuance of an order preventing voluntary compliance on the part of a subpoenaed party solely because of the challenge described in question (1)?[11]

[8] It must be recognized that Cohen initially opposed disclosure voluntarily on the same basis that Gibson did and continued its position to the extent that the FTC was required to apply for disclosure through the Administrative Law Judge. See note 4, supra.

[9] The Court reiterates its view that the first question framed hereafter in this case is not ripe for review at this time and that it can be fully litigated before the Court of Appeals pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §§ 21(d) and 45(b) should an appeal be taken if and when the FTC renders a decision adverse to Gibson. The hypothetical nature of this case is well-illustrated by the conditional tone of the preceding sentence because if the FTC concludes that no violations of the law have occurred after completing its adjudication, Gibson will have suffered no injury as to which it can complain. 5 U.S.C. §§ 702, 704.

The Court proceeds to adjudicate the two questions hereafter delineated because an arguably justiciable matter does exist with regard to Gibson's allegations of denial of due process. The proper role of federal courts in this situation has become somewhat confused because of the decision by the United States Supreme Court in Abbott Laboratories, Inc. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136 (1967), which this Court has previously confronted in a similar context. Atlantic Richfield Co. v. F.T.C., supra, 398 F. Supp. at 12–14; see Davis, Administrative Law Treatise, supra, Chapter [illegible].

A. Standing to Sue

The Administrative Procedure Act confers standing to sue upon a person who is "suffering a legal wrong because of agency action". 5 U.S.C. § 702. Gibson, in order to have standing to challenge the validity of the FTC subpoena duces tecum, must show some protectible legal interest in the subpoenaed records that is subject to administrative invasion.

Gibson initiates its endeavor to provoke a Section 49 judicial confrontation by preliminarily characterizing the pending adjudicative proceeding as peculiarly subject to judicial attack. According to Gibson, the FTC has broad authority in the conduct of an investigative proceeding, United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632 (1950); Hannah v. Larche, 363 U.S. 509 (1961), but its authority to conduct an adjudicative proceeding is allegedly substantially more restricted because "all of the traditional requirements of the due process of an adversary proceeding are thrown into play." Brief of Plaintiffs In Support of Complaint and Motion For Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction at 6 (September 24, 1975) ("Plaintiffs' Brief").

[10] The second question listed hereafter denominates conceptually the justiciable substantive legal issue in this case. This first question "looks ahead" of this suit to the practical impact upon a subsequent litigation of granting at this time the instant injunctive relief requested. However, the first question conceptually raises the threshold issue of Gibson's standing to sue, and this inquiry must be adjudicated first.

Practically speaking, the answers to both questions derive from the same legal sources, and they will therefore be discussed together.

[11] This latter question is potentially a question of first impression in this Circuit. Cf. United States v. White, 477 F.2d 757 (5th Cir.), aff'd per curiam, 487 F.2d 1335 (5th Cir. 1973) (en banc), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 872 (1974); Genuine Parts, Inc. v. F.T.C., supra, 445 F.2d 1382; Frito-Lay, Inc. v. F.T.C., supra, 380 F.2d 8. The reported cases which touch upon the authority of the FTC to subpoena information are all cases brought by the FTC pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49. Since, as has been discussed in note 10 above, the central question in this case is whether a respondent such as Gibson can raise any challenge at all to the issuance of such subpoenas, the adjudication of this latter question assumes only secondary importance.

The Court notes, however, that the second question does not lack significance. In a real sense, the public interest is at stake here, since the authority of courts of the United States to interrupt ongoing FTC adjudicative proceedings in pre-trial discovery poses real problems of judicial economy, efficient functioning of agency adjudicative machinery and prompt adjudication of complaints brought by federal agencies on behalf of the public.

Increasingly, adjudicative respondents are seeking whatever means are available to challenge FTC proceedings. See generally, Annotation, supra, 16 A.L.R. Fed. 361 (1973). In the instant case, Gibson has filed suits similar to this one in virtually every federal district where regional officials of the FTC are conducting corresponding adjudicative proceedings. See H. R. Gibson, Sr., et al v. Plough, Inc., Civil Action No. C-75-409 (W.D. Tenn.); H. R. Gibson, Sr., et al v. Harold Hassenfeld, Civil Action No. 4-75-45 (E.D. Tenn.). Gibson's motion for injunctive relief was denied in the Western District of Tennessee. In the Eastern District of Tennessee, Gibson succeeded in obtaining an ex parte temporary restraining order which has lapsed by its own terms and has not been renewed. See Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Motion of Defendant Federal Trade Commission to Dismiss at 2-3, n.3 (October 3, 1975).

Gibson founds its main argument as to standing on the decision by the United States Supreme Court in Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440 (1964). In that case, a witness had been served with an Internal Revenue Summons and had indicated that he would voluntarily comply. The Supreme Court rejected the petitioner's attempt to enjoin the Internal Revenue Service from enforcing the summons because he was found to have an adequate remedy at law.

According to Gibson, the Supreme Court in a later portion of the opinion stated its approval of suits by third parties to enjoin voluntary compliance with agency administrative subpoenas duces tecum by supboenaed parties. Gibson contends that it has standing to assert its position in the instant case because of the following language used by Mr. Justice Clark > that either the taxpayer or any affected party might restrain compliance, as the Commissioner suggests, until compliance is ordered by a court of competent jurisdiction, 375 U.S. at 445.

In another case dealing with an IRS Summons, the Supreme Court held, according to Gibson, that substantial protection is afforded to a taxpayer because the summons can only be enforced by the courts.

> Once a summons is challenged, it must be scrutinized by a court to determine whether it seeks information relevant to a legitimate investigatory purpose and is not meant "to harass the taxpayer or to put pressure on him to settle a collateral dispute or for any other reason reflecting on the good faith of the particular investigation." United States v. Powell, 379 U.S. 58.

United States v. Bisceglia, 420 U.S. 141 (1975). Gibson further contends that this rule pertaining to an IRS investigative subpoena is applicable by analogy to an FTC adjudicative subpoena and concludes that a failure to ensure review of this adjudicative subpoena by a court of competent jurisdiction would be a denial of due process in contravention of the Fifth Amendment.

1. Adjudicative v. Investigative Subpoenas

While differences between investigative and adjudicative proceedings have previously been recognized by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, see Genuine Parts, Inc. v. F.T.C., supra, 445 F.2d 1382, those differences are of little significance in this case. Subpoenas issued by the FTC in either proceeding share the characteristic of non-self-enforceability, and subpoenas issued during the pendency of both types of proceedings must be enforced pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49 in those instances where the subpoenaed party refuses to comply voluntarily. In litigation at this stage, the central substantive question remains whether the FTC can be forced to litigate by a third party where litigation would otherwise be unnecessary.[12]

2. IRS Summonses v. FTC Subpoenas

In submitting case authorities to bolster their respective positions, both sides have cited cases to this Court which pertain to the enforceability of summonses issued by the IRS. This Court has independently sought to locate cases discussing the enforceability of FTC adjudicative subpoenas prior to commencement of a Section 49 proceeding and has found only one. See F.T.C. v. Harrell, 313 F.2d 854 (7th Cir. 1963). While IRS summonses and FTC subpoenas share many similarities, they are crucially different in one respect: no FTC adjudication can result in criminal prosecution in a suit brought to redress alleged violations of 15 U.S.C. §§ 13(c) or 41 et seq. This difference is significant because the sole rationale providing the foundation for the Supreme Court's concern about an overly broad IRS summons, as expressed in the Bisceglia case quoting United States v. Powell above, is the fear that improper conduct by the IRS can subvert a taxpayer's constitutional rights should a criminal prosecution occur.

3. Gibson's Interest in the Subject Documents

Gibson has proffered no information to the Court to substantiate its allegation of a protectible proprietary interest in the documents in the possession of Cohen, or for that matter, in any testimony Cohen might give in response to a subpoena ad testificandum, other than to state that business documents containing information relating to Gibson are in the possession and control of Cohen. Accordingly, Gibson has made no prima facie showing that it has a legally protectible interest or privilege in the subpoenaed material. Cf. Kelley v. United States, 503 F.2d 93 (9th Cir. 1974).[13]

The documents which are the subject of this "suit for protection" are not in Gibson's possession or in the possession or custody of any business official of Gibson's. There can be no vicarious assertion of Fourth Amendment rights, whether by a natural or a corporate person, Alderman v. United States, 394 U.S. 165, 171-72 (1969), and the plaintiffs therefore have no standing to raise any allegations of unlawful search and seizure.

[12] Additionally, the Court notes that differences between adjudicative and investigative proceedings may be of little significance even at the "Section 49" stage of the proceedings. Extensive rules have been promulgated by the FTC which it has agreed to be governed by during the course of an adjudicative proceeding. 16 C.F.R. §§ 3.0 et seq. Once the agency creates procedural rules under which its actions are to be judged, it denies itself the right to violate these rules, 5 U.S.C. § 556; United States ex rel. Accardi v. Shaughnessy, 347 U.S. 260 (1957); and the rules must be scrupulously observed. Pacific Molasses Co. v. F.T.C., 356 F.2d 386, 389 (5th Cir. 1966). Thus, when the FTC seeks judicial enforcement in an appropriate case pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49, its decision to seek such enforcement, already authorized by an Administrative Law Judge after a review of the relevance of the subpoenaed material, should enjoy a presumption of regularity in much the same manner that an investigative subpoena does.

The role of the Court of Appeals provides adjudicative respondents with salient relief in cases where subpoenas are allegedly improperly issued. A violation of agency rules from which prejudice results dictates that any action taken as a result of the proceedings cannot stand. Pacific Molasses Co. v. F.T.C., supra, 356 F.2d at 390. The agency should not be stopped in its tracks during the proceeding only because allegations of denial of due process are sounded in conclusory language. Bokat v. Tidewater Equipment Co., 363 F.2d 667, 673 (5th Cir. 1966).

[13] The Kelley case is heavily relied upon by Gibson as recent support for its position as to standing. The Court agrees with the FTC, however, that the holding of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in that case states, at best, that a party raising a contention of protectible interest must be given the right to make a prima facie showing of such an interest. Given the opportunity in this case, Gibson has failed to make such a showing. Indeed,

A more complex, but no more meritorious, legal question is raised in adjudicating plaintiffs' Fifth Amendment rights. It is well-settled that no corporation can invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Similarly, an individual has no right to claim a Fifth Amendment privilege on behalf of a corporation or by his mere possession or custody of corporate documents. Further, there is no right to avoid the adverse effects of evidence rendered by third parties who possess information about a corporate subject or a natural person. E.g., Couch v. United States, 409 U.S. 322 (1973); Donaldson v. United States, 400 U.S. 517 (1971). The Supreme Court, following Justice Holmes' conclusion that "[a] party is privileged from producing [incriminating] evidence but not from its production," Johnson v. United States, 228 U.S. 457, 458 (1913), has stressed that the Fifth Amendment privilege "adheres basically to the person, not to information that may incriminate him". Couch v. United States, supra at 328. There is no legitimate expectation of privacy so as to provide a basis for invoking the Fourth or Fifth Amendments with respect to records, whether belonging to an adjudicative respondent and surrendered by him to a third party, such as an accountant or a lawyer, or belonging to such third person originally. Id. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has consistently upheld administrative subpoenas in challenges similar to the one raised here. E.g., United States v. White, 477 F.2d 147 (5th Cir. 1973); United States v. Newman, 441 F.2d 165 (5th Cir. 1971).

4. The Current Status of the Reisman Case

a. Donaldson v. United States

Even if there were no fundamental difference between an IRS summons and an FTC subpoena so that Gibson's quoted language from Reisman v. Caplin were fully applicable, reliance on the Reisman case would still be inappropriate because of the subsequent opinions by the Supreme Court in Donaldson v. United States and Couch v. United States, cases which clarify and restrict the prior Reisman holding.

In Donaldson v. United States, supra, the Supreme Court was faced with a taxpayer's challenge to an attempt by the IRS to obtain considering the nature of the documents described and Gibson's business relationship with Cohen, such a showing as was contemplated by the Ninth Circuit could not be made under the facts of this case.

information about the taxpayer from records of a company which had previously employed the taxpayer. Mr. Justice Blackmun, speaking for the majority, initiated his analysis of the question there presented by reiterating a point made by Judge Tuttle in the opinion for the Court of Appeals, 418 F.2d at 1214: that what was sought in Donaldson were records of the employer, not records of the taxpayer. No summons had been issued in that case to the taxpayer, nor was one directed to the taxpayer's records in the hands of his attorney or accountant, with the attendant questions of privilege, or even in the hands of anyone with whom the taxpayer had a confidential relationship. 400 U.S. at 523. Thus, according to Justice Blackmun, each of the Donaldson summonses was directed to a third person with respect to whom no established legal privilege existed. Id. The records sought there were records owned by a third person, in his hands, relating to that person's business transactions with the taxpayer. Id.

The Donaldson facts with regard to the nature of the records summonsed are therefore identical to the facts of this case regarding the material subpoenaed from Cohen. After reviewing the prior Reisman and Powell decisions, upon which Gibson heavily relies in the instant case, the Donaldson Court went on to analyze whether under the circumstances presented the taxpayer had a right to intervene in the IRS Summons proceeding pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a). The Court concluded that Donaldson did not have a right to intervene under Rule 24(a). 400 U.S. at 528. Looking to the language in Reisman relied upon by Gibson in the instant case,[14] the Court concluded that this language was permissive only and not mandatory, 400 U.S. at 529; further, such language did not dictate that in every proceeding where records were being sought which were in the custody of a third party, the subject of the investigation was entitled to participate in the judicial proceeding which determined whether disclosure was appropriate.

The Court went on to illustrate when a District Court could allow the taxpayer to intervene: (1) where the material is sought for the improper purpose of obtaining evidence for use in a criminal prosecution; and (2) where the material sought is protected by the attorney-client privilege. 400 U.S. at 530. The Court therefore expressly overruled those decisions by the Courts of Appeals which had previously held that a taxpayer could intervene simply because it was his tax liability that was the subject of an IRS summons. Id.

The Court then turned to the question of Donaldson's "interest" in the summonsed material:

> The nature of the "interest" urged by the taxpayer is apparent from the fact that the

[14] "[T]he party summoned and one 'affected by a disclosure may appear or intervene' before the Court." 400 U.S. at 529 quoting Reisman v. Caplin, supra, 375 U.S. at 445, 449.

> material in question (once we assume its relevance) would not be subject to suppression if the Government obtained it by other routine means, such as by Acme's independent and voluntary disclosure prior to summons, or by way of identifiable deductions in Acme's [Donaldson's employer] own income tax returns, or through Mercurio's [Acme's accountant's] appearance as a trial witness, or by subpoena of the records for trial. This interest cannot be the kind contemplated by Rule 24(a)(2) when it speaks in general terms of "an interest relating to the property or transaction which is the subject of the action." (emphasis added) 400 U.S. at 531.

To this Court, the above-quoted language totally disposes of Gibson's contentions in the instant case. Gibson disputes this, contending that the Donaldson Court resolved nothing more than an interpretation of Rule 24(a). This Court does not agree. The Donaldson Court declared that a person in Gibson's position can have no protectible interest in records of the kind which are subpoenaed in the instant case. Thus, Gibson cannot possibly intervene in any subsequent proceeding instituted by the FTC against Cohen, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49, even if this Court granted Gibson's requested relief and stayed Cohen's attempts to comply with a lawful request. At this stage, therefore, Gibson has no standing to object to Cohen's desire to comply voluntarily with the instant subpoena.

b. Couch v. United States

Even if Gibson had succeeded somehow in demonstrating to this Court that it had some proprietary interest in the material which is the subject of the Cohen subpoena, this Court would still find that Gibson had no standing in the instant case because of the decision by the Supreme Court in Couch v. United States, 409 U.S. 322 (1973).

In Couch, a taxpayer sought to preclude disclosure to the IRS of records originally in the possession of the taxpayer's accountant (later transferred to her attorney). Justice Powell, speaking for the majority, prefaced his discussion of the substantive issue by indicating how Couch differed from Donaldson:

> Here petitioner does own the business records which the Government seeks to review and the courts below did permit her to intervene. The essential inquiry is whether her proprietary interest further enables her to assert successfully a privilege against compulsory self-incrimination to bar enforcement of the summons and production of the records, despite the fact that the records no longer remained in her possession. 409 U.S. at 327.

After analyzing the nature of this Fifth Amendment privilege, Justice Powell went on to emphasize that the privilege is a personal one, 409 U.S. at 328, and does not proscribe incriminating statements elicited from another. Id. Turning to the facts of the Couch case, Justice Powell found that only the taxpayer's accountant was under compulsion to do anything. The taxpayer was not compelled or coerced to testify, and the accountant made no claim that he would be incriminated by the production. 409 U.S. at 329. Justice Powell summarized the limitations on proper invocation of the Fifth Amendment privilege by stating:

> The divulgence of potentially incriminating evidence against petitioner is naturally unwelcome. But petitioner's distress would be no less if the divulgence came not from her accountant but from some other third party with whom she was connected and who possessed substantially equivalent knowledge of her business affairs. The basic complaint of petitioner stems from the fact of divulgence of the possibly incriminating information, not from the manner in which or the person from whom it was extracted. Yet such divulgence, where it did not coerce the accused herself, is a necessary part of the process of law enforcement and tax investigation. (emphasis added)

409 U.S. at 329. He concluded that possession, and not ownership, should be the cutting edge of proper invocation of the Fifth Amendment privilege. 409 U.S. at 330-31.

Gibson does not cite or attempt to distinguish Couch, but those decisions which Gibson does cite are inapposite. As Couch demonstrates, the fundamental question in all cases of this nature is whether any privilege exists which may be invoked properly.

On the basis of Couch, Donaldson and subsequent decisions by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit which follow these Supreme Court holdings, see United States v. White, supra, 477 F.2d 757, 763, this Court concludes: that Gibson has no protectible interest in the documents in question; that the documents are not in Gibson's possession but in the possession of a third party with whom Gibson has no cognizable privileged relationship; and that therefore Gibson can invoke no privilege to preclude appropriate disclosure of the documents. In effect, Gibson lacks standing to challenge voluntary disclosure of the documents.

B. This Court's Authority in Requiring Proceedings To Be Instituted Under 15 U.S.C. § 49

Gibson's lack of standing dictates that this Court, whose role in reviewing administrative proceedings of this type is extremely limited to begin with, has no authority whatsoever in this case to enjoin Cohen from complying voluntarily with the subject subpoenas duces tecum so as to require the FTC to institute proceedings pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49. To require such a proceeding would be a pointless exercise and would generate substantial waste of judicial and administrative energies for no purpose. Even if such a proceeding were properly instituted where compliance was otherwise voluntary, Gibson could have no part in such a proceeding. Cf. F.T.C. v. Harrell, supra, 313 F.2d at 856.

VIII. PROPRIETY OF INJUNCTIVE OR DECLARATORY RELIEF

Granting or denying a preliminary injunction rests within the discretion of this Court. 11 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 2948, at 427 (1973). The factors to be considered in determining whether preliminary injunctive relief is appropriate are:

(1) whether the plaintiff is likely to prevail on the merits; (2) whether the plaintiff is in danger of suffering irreparable harm; (3) whether the potential harm to the defendants from issuance of the injunction outweighs the possible harm to the plaintiff if injunctive relief is denied; (4) whether issuance of a preliminary injunction will serve the public interest. Blackshear Residents Organization v. Romney, 472 F.2d 1197 (5th Cir. 1973).

Applying this test to the facts and arguments now before the Court, the Court concludes that no preliminary injunction should issue and that plaintiffs are not entitled to declaratory relief. See F.T.C. v. Harrell, supra, 313 F.2d 854.

Plaintiffs cannot prevail on the merits in this case. There is no justiciable case or controversy between plaintiffs and defendants. To the extent that there is a justiciable case or controversy between plaintiffs and the Intervenor FTC, the case is arguably not ripe for decision at this time. Frito-Lay, Inc. v. F.T.C., supra, 380 F.2d 8. If the case is ripe for adjudication, plaintiffs lack standing to sue on the points raised in their complaint.

Plaintiffs are in no danger of suffering irreparable harm. Their objections to the pre-trial discovery sought by the FTC in this adjudicative proceeding will not be lost if defendants voluntarily comply with the instant subpoenas duces tecum. Full review of all of the actions taken by the Commission and the Administrative Law Judge is available before a Court of Appeals. 15 U.S.C. §§ 21(d), 45(b).

Whatever harm can be said to result to plaintiffs as the result of their natural aversion to divulgence of any information which possibly exposes them to civil liability, such harm is significantly outweighed by the potential harm to the FTC as a consequence of the issuance of the requested injunction. See note 11, supra. Additionally, issuance of an injunction would disserve the public interest. The FTC has adopted extensive rules by which it has agreed to be governed during the course of adjudicative proceedings. 16 C.F.R. §§ 3.0 et seq. The FTC and the Administrative Law Judge are bound to abide by these rules, and violation of such rules can result in a dissolving by the Court of Appeals of any order which the Commission might issue.

In this case, charges have been raised concerning potential violations of the antitrust laws of the United States. 15 U.S.C. §§ 13(c), 45. The FTC is charged with enforcing these laws in the public interest. Were Gibson to be granted the relief it seeks in this case, a precedent of judicial interference would be established which erects serious impediments to prompt, efficient adjudication of agency proceedings instituted by the filing of an FTC complaint. Needless expense would be generated if adjudicative respondents were permitted in wholesale fashion to halt pretrial proceedings by filing court actions of the sort filed here in an attempt to arouse opposition in others where none exists and where the complaining respondent has no standing to initiate such attempts. The public interest necessarily would suffer because of the resulting costly delays in law enforcement.

The current system of adjudicative proceedings is designed to function within strict guidelines. Service of the public interest, in the first instance, begins with the observance by the FTC of these guidelines in promptly adjudicating complaints. Once complaints are filed, and all guidelines are properly observed, the public interest is not served when the judiciary interrupts what is otherwise a harmonious attempt to secure pre-trial discovery in pending administrative proceedings by injecting opposition founded on no protectible private interest. *Cf. IX. CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs' motions for temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction are therefore denied. Since equitable relief is effectively the only relief which plaintiffs are seeking in this case, the denying of plaintiffs' motions by this Court dictates that this case must be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DONE at Houston, Texas, this 30th day of October 1975.

FINAL JUDGMENT

The Court having considered the plaintiffs' motions for temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction and the motion to intervene by the Federal Trade Commission, and having concluded that the motion to intervene should be granted and the motions for injunctive relief should be denied, Therefore, it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that plaintiffs' requested equitable relief be denied in all respects and that this case be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

This is a FINAL JUDGMENT.

(United States District Court, Southern District of New York, November 5, 1975)

In a consolidated action for preenforcement review by six major companies charged with violating F.T.C. consent orders, court held that plaintiffs did not justify their assertions that F.T.C.'s determinations violated their rights of due process. Court, while not categorically rejecting preenforcement review of F.T.C.'s determinations, refused to exercise jurisdiction and dismissed the action, thereby remanding the companies to the promptly instituted civil penalties actions.

Before TENNEY, District Judge:

MEMORANDUM

Plaintiffs, the six major producers of tobacco products in the United States, filed six separate actions in this Court on August 15, 1975. These six actions, now consolidated, seek pre-enforcement review of certain determinations made by the Federal Trade Commission ("the Commission") to the effect that the six plaintiff corporations are in violation of a 1972 Consent Order relating to health warnings in cigarette advertising. The defendants are various federal officials (including the Chairman and members of the Commission and the Attorney General of the United States), the Commission, and the United States of America.

Defendants now seek an order of this Court pursuant to Rule 12(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure dismissing the complaints of each of the corporate plaintiffs. The six complaints, while not identical, are so substantially similar that the Court need not consider each of them separately.

FACTS

On January 11, 1964, the report of the Surgeon General's Advisory Committee on Smoking and Health was issued alerting the public to the potential health hazards associated with cigarette smoking. The Commission issued a proposed rule calling for the inclusion of a warning statement in all cigarette labeling and advertising, but, prior to implementation of the rule, Congress enacted the Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act of 1965, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1331 et seq. The thrust of the 1965 Act was to mandate the inclusion of a health warning in cigarette labeling while prohibiting, until July 1, 1969, a similar warning in cigarette advertising.

In July of 1969, the Commission again indicated its desire to deal with cigarette advertising, but once again Congress intervened and enacted the Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act of 1969, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1331 et seq. While strengthening the warning to be carried on cigarette packages and prohibiting cigarette advertising on the broadcast media, the 1969 Act prohibited the Commission from moving in the area of print advertising until July 1, 1971. 15 U.S.C. § 1336(a). It should be noted that Congress specifically provided that the 1969 Act was not to be read as limiting the authority of the Commission in dealing with deceptive advertising practices. 15 U.S.C. § 1336(b).

Consequently, in July of 1971, the Commission served the plaintiffs herein with proposed complaints charging plaintiffs with a failure to promptly disclose the health hazards associated with the use of their products. There followed an intensive settlement negotiation which culminated in six identical Consent Orders which were signed in January of 1972 and issued by the Commission on March 30, 1972. These Consent Orders were notable for the degree of specificity with which they described the various advertising warnings.

During the fall of 1972, compliance reports were submitted to the Commission by each of the plaintiff corporations. In each case the Commission reported to each of the plaintiffs and then to Congress that, assuming the accuracy of the reports, there appeared to be full compliance with the Consent Orders thereby rendering compliance enforcement actions unnecessary. The Commission's report to Congress in January of 1974 also found substantial compliance.

Subsequently, however, in late 1974 and early 1975, the staff of the Commission raised allegations of numerous instances of noncompliance. These allegations included practices employed prior to the filing of the compliance reports, but which were not disclosed in the reports and practices commenced after the filing of the reports. The plaintiff corporations cooperated with the staff of the Commission in attempting to resolve these alleged differences and simultaneously recommended to the Commission that the staff's position be rejected. Negotiations broke down shortly thereafter and eventually the Commission accepted the staff's recommendations.

By letters to each of the plaintiff corporations dated August 1, 1975, the Commission notified the plaintiffs of its finding of noncompliance. The Commission stated its intention to commence enforcement actions for civil penalties as to certain of the violations and granted a grace period of 180 days to allow for the correction of certain other alleged violations. Plaintiffs thereupon filed the instant actions seeking preenforcement review of the Commission's determination. Plaintiffs also sought a preliminary injunction staying the imposition of civil penalties pending the determination of the matter on the merits. This application was denied by this Court in a Memorandum and Order dated August 28, 1975, and is now sub judice in the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Concurrently with the above-mentioned activity, the Commission was engaged in preparing enforcement action complaints. These complaints, along with a notice of intent, were submitted to the Attorney General on August 28, 1975. The Department of Justice reviewed, revised, and agreed to file the complaints. The six complaints were filed in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia on October 17, 1975. These complaints allege all of the violations set forth in the Commission's letters of August 1, 1975, to the plaintiff corporations, except those violations to which the 180 day grace period attached.

Plaintiffs contend that this Court has jurisdiction to grant the preenforcement review which they seek. It is their position that the determination of the Commission as expressed in the August 1, 1975 letter leaves them in an impossible position and one in which they cannot constitutionally be forced to remain. In essence, they feel that they must either acquiesce immediately and correct every alleged violation of the 1972 Consent Order at great financial cost and at the added expense of foregoing judicial review since they contend that there has been no violation or they must sit back and await the commencement of a civil action for the enforcement of penalties by the Attorney General or by the Commission while potentially destructive civil penalties mount. It should be noted additionally that as to the violations alleged, plaintiffs contend that the allegations are either erroneous or so vague as to fail to give notice of the alleged violations. They conclude that preenforcement review is appropriate and necessary where the threat of ruinous civil penalties would be so coercive as to discourage judicial review and thereby work a deprivation of due process.

Defendants have premised their argument that this Court lacks jurisdiction to review in the preenforcement situation on alleged "clear and convincing evidence of a contrary Congressional intent" and additionally because the grant of review in this instance would "tend to oust the Attorney General from his statutory role in Federal trade litigation. . . ." (Government's Reply Memorandum, at 1). Furthermore, defendants maintain that, under the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 704, preenforcement review must be withheld where plaintiffs have another adequate remedy and that, in this instance, the enforcement action instituted on October 17, 1975, provides these plaintiffs with an adequate forum in which to redress their grievances. Thus, the defendants conclude that these plaintiffs should be remitted to the enforcement action pending in the District of Columbia.

The Administrative Procedure Act provides for judicial review of agency action in two instances:

> Agency action made reviewable by statute and final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court are subject to judicial review. . . . 5 U.S.C. § 704.

In order to sustain jurisdiction it must clearly be demonstrated to this Court either that there is a specific statutory grant entitling these plaintiffs to seek review of the Commission's action at this stage or that there is no other adequate remedy in a court.

In Floersheim v. Engman 494 F.2d 949 (D. C. Cir. 1973), the Commission had determined that various forms used by Floersheim in his business were deceptive. The Commission's cease and desist order was reviewed by the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit and sustained. Floersheim submitted a revised form as part of his compliance report, but this was also rejected, and in consequence of this rejection Floersheim sought preenforcement review. The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit ordered the dismissal of the action on the ground that the Ninth Circuit, which had originally affirmed the cease and desist order, was the proper court to review its own order in the event that clarification of the order was required.

In reaching its conclusion, the Court noted that the only section of the Federal Trade Commission Act which provides for judicial review is section 5(c), 15 U.S.C. § 45(c). This section provides for review of a cease and desist order by a Court of Appeals within sixty days of the service of such an order. In Floersheim, the order had previously been challenged and sustained and section 5(c) was therefore deemed to be inapplicable. In the instant case no review was sought within the statutory period and section 5(c) is equally inapplicable. The Court concluded that "[t]he Federal Trade Commission Act does not in terms authorize review of Commission interpretations of cease and desist orders." Id. at 952.

Appellant in Floersheim claimed to be faced with the same intolerable situation as plaintiffs in the instant case, i.e., to acquiesce in what was considered to be an erroneous ruling or to litigate in the face of potentially ruinous civil penalties. The Court responded to Floersheim's argument stating:

> Petitioner's sketch of an unfairly onerous choice is too darkly drawn by far. . . . [T]he statutory provision for civil recovery of penalties . . . refers to a maximum, not a minimum. There is room for leniency by the court. . . . Id. at 952–53.

The Court went on to state:

> The claim that FTC is taking a more rigorous view of the requirement of the order than the respondent considers sound is not a basis for advance judicial consideration. This is the kind of point that can be raised when an enforcement sanction is pursued . . . for there is opportunity there to obtain a softening of penalty for a construction that is bona fide and reasonable even though ultimately rejected. Advance judicial consideration under the doctrine of Regal Knitwear is reserved for the case of exceptional need and unfairness. Id. at 954.

The Court found no such exceptional need nor unfairness.

This Court is not prepared to go as far as the Floersheim court and holds that the present case is not one of "exceptional need and unfairness." Nor is this Court prepared to categorically reject jurisdiction in the preenforcement situation. The very fact of the initiation of the enforcement action in the District of Columbia makes it unnecessary for this Court to reach the question. The clear course which this Court must chart is to decline to exercise jurisdiction and to defer to the enforcement action as was suggested in Floersheim. This conclusion is buttressed by two recent cases.

In General Motors Corporation v. Volpe, 457 F.2d 922 (3d Cir. 1972), the National Highway Safety Bureau directed General Motors to notify all owners of a certain model pickup truck of a safety defect. General Motors commenced an action for preenforcement review of the National Highway Safety Bureau's direction. The Bureau thereafter commenced an enforcement action. In affirming the district court's dismissal of General Motors' action, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit noted the district court's finding that "it was 'hard put to understand how this action could possibly be adequate for the protection of GM's statutory rights and yet the [pending] enforcement action be inadequate.' " Id. at 923 quoting General Motors Corporation v. Volpe, 321 F. Supp. 1112, 1125 (D. Del. 1970).

The court of appeals was careful to point out, however, that the case was not one where the district court clearly lacked jurisdiction, but rather was one where, in the exercise of its discretion, the district court declined to exercise that jurisdiction. The court also noted that the result might well have been otherwise if the National Highway Safety Bureau had not brought its enforcement action within a reasonable time.

In Ford Motor Company v. Coleman, 75 Civ. 1340 (D. D. C., September 22, 1975) (three judge court), plaintiff sought preenforcement review of a defect notification order. Plaintiff attacked the constitutionality of the Motor Vehicle and School-bus Safety Act of 1974. The Court held that there was jurisdiction to review the constitutionality of the statute, but with regard to review of the defect notification order, held that "[i]f the enforcement action is brought promptly by the Government, the action filed by the manufacturer should be consolidated with the enforcement action." Id. at 12-13. The court went on to note that > [w]hile we entertain the possibility of a need for a pre-enforcement action, we think it contrary to the spirit of the Act to encourage forum-shopping by the manufacturer. We agree with the Third Circuit in General Motors v. Volpe, supra, 437 F.2d at 923-24 . . . that the pre-enforcement action should be transferred to the district of the enforcement action, if that action has been promptly instituted. Id. at 13, n. 30.

It is the conclusion of this Court that the enforcement action filed in the District of Columbia was promptly instituted. The Court further finds that no undue prejudice will accrue to these plaintiffs if they are remitted to the Government's enforcement action. Potential liability for penalties would be the same in each instance and any claims raised by the plaintiffs in this action can be raised by way of defense in the enforcement action.

Accordingly, this Court will decline to exercise jurisdiction in this action and will dismiss the six complaints in this consolidated action.

Civ. A. No. Civ.-4-75-45. F.T.C. Docket No. 9016.

(United States District Court, Eastern District of Tennessee, November 10, 1975)

On action for injunctive relief, court held that F.T.C. could intervene in this case and because complaint in this matter failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, intervenor's motion to dismiss the complaint in this action is granted.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This is an action for injunctive relief. 28 U. S. C. §§ 1331 (a), 1332 (a) (1), (c), 1337. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) moved to intervene herein as a defendant. Rule 24, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Such motion has merit.

The facts are basically undisputed. Several of the respective plaintiffs are respondents in an administrative action, being docket no. 9016, brought by the FTC on February 25, 1975, alleging certain violations of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13, and the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45; thereafter, certain subpoenas ad testificandum and duces tecum were issued to the defendants in connection with the aforementioned administrative action; the defendants herein have indicated that they would voluntarily comply with such subpoenas; and the respective plaintiffs herein seek ultimately a permanent injunction, prohibiting compliance with such subpoenas pending judicial enforcement of same.

Although it is clear that the FTC may be permitted permissively to intervene, Rule 24 (b), supra, such party is also entitled to intervene herein as a matter of right. Rule 24 (a), supra. Such latter rule provides:

* * * * * * *

> * * * Upon timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action: (1) when a statute of the United States confers an unconditional right to intervene; or (2) when the applicant claims an interest relating to the property or transaction which is the subject of the action and he is so situated that the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede his ability to protect that interest, unless the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties.* * *

The claimed interest of the FTC is immediately obvious, i.e., to protect the subpoena power provided by 15 U. S. C. § 49, which is also the subject of the action herein. Likewise, as a practical matter, the FTC's ability to protect its subpoena power may be impeded, and its interest herein is not being adequately represented by the existing defendant; e.g.: on September 9, 1975, the existing defendants herein consented to a temporary restraining order prohibiting them from complying with the aforesaid subpoenas. From all of which the Court concludes that the FTC may intervene herein as a defendant as a matter of right. Rule 24 (a), supra.

The FTC also moved to dismiss this action for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Rule 12 (b) (6). Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Such motion likewise has merit. The plaintiffs correctly contend that the subpoena power of the FTC may be likened to discovery proceeding under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Adams v. F. T. C., C. A. 8th (1961), 296 F. (2d) 861, 866 [3], and is comparable to a summons from the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). United States v. Powell (1964), 379 U. S. 48, 57, 85 S. Ct. 248, 13 L. Ed. (2d) 112, 119 [6]. It is likewise true that the FTC has no enforcement power over its administrative subpoena, but must apply to a United States District Court for such enforcement. 15 U. S. C. § 49, supra; F. T. C. v. Hallmark, Inc., C. A. 7th (1959), 265 F. (2d) 433, 437 [2].

The plaintiffs contend that they have a proprietary right in the information sought by the FTC and therefore may restrain the defendants' compliance with the administrative subpoena. However, other than the bald assertion that such an interest is possessed by the plaintiffs, there is no indication that such is the case here.* The plaintiffs rely principally on Reisman v. Caplin (1964), 375 U. S. 440, 449-450, 84 S. Ct. 508, 11 L. Ed. (2d), 459, 466 (headnote 12), where the Court was dealing with the enforcement of an IRS subpoena and stated: "* * * [If the witness should indicate that he would voluntarily turn the papers over to the commissioner of Internal Revenue], either the taxpayer or any affected party might restrain compliance * * * until compliance is ordered by a court of competent jurisdiction. * * *" (Emphasis added).

The same contentions of the plaintiffs were advanced and rejected in H. R. Gibson, Sr., et al., plaintiffs, v. Plough, Inc., et al., defendants, No. C-75-409, in the District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, Western Division, order of September 12, 1975, wherein the Court reconsidered its previous order of September 9, 1975 denying equitable relief and stated:

* * * * * * *

> In Donaldson v. United States, 400 U.S. 517 (1971), however, the Supreme Court explained and limited to some extent the effect of Reisman, supra. In Donaldson, the court made clear that not just any "affected party" has a right to intervene in the agency subpoena enforcement proceedings. Only one demonstrating a sufficiently protectable proprietary interest in the subpoenaed evidence and demonstrating a specific basis for extraordinary relife [sic: relief] may intervene as of right pursuant to Fed. R.Civ. P. 24(a)(2), 400 U.S. at 530-531. In Donaldson, the court concluded that the "affected party," a taxpayer under I.R.S. investigation, had shown no proprietary interest in the employment records of his former employer and the latter's accountant, only a desire to prevent potentially unfavorable information from coming into the hands of I.R.S.

---

* The subpoena ad testificandum requests the testimony of the defendant herein Mr. Harold Hassenfeld, and the subpoena duces tecum seeks contracts, books, records, checks, and other business records of such defendant and of the Empire Pencil Company and the plaintiffs herein.

> investigators. The court held that the district judge did not err in denying the taxpayer's motion to intervene in the I.R.S. proceeding to assert his objection to the subpoenas.
> This action is, of course, a step removed from the situation in Donaldson. The case is before the court on a motion for injunction, not a motion to intervene. The only "property right" in the subpoenaed evidence which plaintiff has intimated is the same as that found insufficient in Donaldson - a mere desire to keep information from government investigators, information which is part of the records of defendants (relating to business dealings with the plaintiffs).
> Plaintiffs have not demonstrated sufficient proprietary interest nor any specific basis of improper subpoena action to justify the evocation of extraordinary equitable remedies. There is no showing of claimed privilege, and the plaintiffs' claim relative to illegal search and seizure are without substance.

* * * * * * *

An analogous situation, factually and otherwise, is presented herein. For such reasons the intervening defendant FTC's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted hereby is GRANTED, Rule 12(b)(6), supra, and the plaintiffs hereby are DENIED all relief. Rule 58 (1), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

JUDGMENT ON DECISION BY THE COURT

This action came on for consideration by the Court, upon the intervening defendant The Federal Trade Commission's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, and the issues having been duly considered and a decision having been duly rendered,

It is ORDERED and ADJUDGED that the plaintiffs are denied all relief herein and this action hereby is dismissed.

Dated at Greeneville, Tennessee this tenth day of November, 1975.

C.A. No. 1298-71 F.T.C. Docket 8785

(United States District Court, District of Columbia, November 13, 1975)

PRETRIAL ORDER

This case is before the Court on remand from the United States Court of Appeals for this Circuit. 511 F.2d 815, reh. denied per curiam, suggestion for rehearing en banc, denied en banc. Nos. 73-2212 and 74-1144 (June 23, 1975). Plaintiff has now moved for entry of a pretrial order in accordance with the directions of the Court of Appeals. The defendants' response and accompanying affidavits, however, caused the plaintiff to also file a motion for an injunctive order compelling the defendants to immediately release all of the requested information directly to the plaintiff. This Court does not find it necessary at this time to consider the plaintiff's most recent motion because the Court will enter a pretrial order in accordance with the directives of the Court of Appeals.

In the response to the plaintiff's motion for entry of a pretrial order, the defendants have submitted affidavits purporting to describe the "internal memoranda" and the "chronological minutes." On the basis of these affidavits, the defendants maintain that an in camera inspection is unnecessary and that this Court can enter an order finding the memoranda and minutes to be exempt under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). This Court, however, not only finds that these affidavits are "legally insufficient" but also finds that an in camera inspection is clearly mandated by the Court of Appeals.

As to the forty-two "internal memoranda" the language of the Court of Appeals is unambiguous:

> Therefore, we direct that the District Judge inspect at least a random sample of these forty-two documents sufficient to provide an objectively verifiable basis for deciding whether the agency descriptions are indeed conclusory or indeed reasonably accurate and specific. 511 F.2d at 817 (emphasis added).

The defendants now seek to avoid an in camera inspection by submitting descriptions that in their opinion are not "conclusory." But, having found that these descriptions are as conclusory as those previously submitted, this Court must engage in an in camera inspection.* The same is true with respect to the "chronological minutes," for which the Court of Appeals also directed an in camera inspection be had: ". . . the District Judge should examine in camera a representative portion of the minutes." 511 F.2d at 818 (footnote omitted) (emphasis added).

* This Court does not agree that an in camera inspection may be voided merely because it can be said that the descriptions are not per se conclusory. Rather, it appears that the test is whether the Court can properly determine whether in fact the documents should be exempt under the Freedom of Information Act in the absence of an in camera inspection. Under the guidelines set forth by the Court of Appeals, an in camera inspection appears necessary in this case.

Further, defendants also assert that an in camera inspection of all of the documents and minutes is unnecessary. In fact, in the affidavits submitted by the government, only a few randomly selected documents are described. This Court does not agree. First, it does not appear that the documents are so voluminous that at the outset it can be conclusively said that only a random selection and review is feasible. And, second, particularly in this case, it is the Court and not the defendants that will make the selection, if that is necessary. Only this Court can determine if it is unable to inspect all of the documents, and the defendants have not convinced it otherwise. If the Court finds itself unable to inspect all of the documents, it will so state and then randomly select documents upon which to base its ruling. It is this Court's belief that the letter and the spirit of the opinion of the Court of Appeals requires no less.

Therefore, it is, by the Court, pursuant to Rule 1-9(e) of the Local Rules of this Court, this 12th day of November, 1975.

Ordered, that the defendant Federal Trade Commission shall within thirty days of the date of this order:

1. File with the Court a detailed description of each chronological minute or part thereof requested by the complaint, and a detailed justification for withholding each such minute or segregable portion thereof; a copy thereof shall be served upon plaintiff.

2. File with the Court a detailed description of each of the forty-two internal memoranda still withheld by the Commission, and a detailed justification for withholding each such memorandum or segregable portion thereof; a copy thereof shall be served upon plaintiff.

For the purposes of this order, a "detailed description" and a "detailed justification" shall mean that for each minute and for each internal memorandum and for each appendix or other attachment thereto and for each segregable part, subpart or portion of said chronological minutes requested in whole or in part by the complaint; and it is Further Ordered, that, of said internal memoranda, the Commission shall state:

A. The date of said chronological minute, internal memorandum, appendix or attachment thereto;

B. The identity of each author, preparer or submitter of each said

 These forty-two internal memoranda are identified in Plaintiff's July 6, 1973 Memorandum of Remaining Documents for which In Camera Inspection is Requested.

chronological minute, internal memorandum, appendix or attachment thereto;

C. The identity of each recipient of each said chronological minute, internal memorandum, appendix or attachment thereto;

D. The identity of each person whose oral or written communications were referred to in each said chronological minute, internal memorandum, appendix or attachment thereto;

E. A detailed factual breakdown and description by title, subtitle and general content of each part or portion of each said chronological minute, internal memorandum, appendix or attachment thereto. Said breakdown and descriptions may and should include reference to the actual language of the document where it is asserted that no portion of the document is either disclosable or segregable.

F. A detailed exposition and factual explanation of the uses for which each said chronological minute, internal memorandum, appendix or attachment thereto were put, of the purpose for preparing each said document or part thereof, and of the factual basis for any claim that disclosure of each said document in whole or part would violate the FOIA. Mere recitations that the document or any portion thereof consists of opinions, proposals, views, recommendations, comments, analysis, or suggestions concerning proposed or actual actions undertaken or considered by the Commission will not satisfy the requirements of this subparagraph. The Commission must make a detailed factual showing for each document and each part thereof why disclosure would not be warranted under the FOIA.

G. For each said chronological minute, internal memoranda, appendix or attachment thereto which the Commission claims should be withheld in toto, a detailed showing why no deletions may be made therein and as deleted, released to plaintiff; and

H. For each chronological minute or internal memoranda, an identification of each statement of policy, interpretation, vote, decision, opinion, ruling, or other action or transaction of the Commission which was interpreted, followed, applied, adopted or embodied in said minute or memorandum;

I. For each chronological minute an identification of each of the aforesaid forty-two internal memoranda referred to therein in any manner; and it is Further Ordered, that thirty (30) days after the Commission has filed the descriptions, explanations and statements required in Part I hereof, the Commission shall submit to the Court for inspection in camera each chronological minute required in whole or in part by the complaint and each of the forty-two internal memoranda specified in plaintiff's July 6, 1974 Memorandum of Remaining Documents for which In Camera Inspection is Requested.

GIFFORD-HILL & COMPANY, INC. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, ET AL.*

No. 74-2024. F.T.C. Docket 8989.

(United States Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit, November 20, 1975)

1. IF CHALLENGED ACTION CAUSED INJURY IN FACT AND IF ALLEGED INJURY WAS IN ZONE OF INTERESTS TO BE PROTECTED OR REGULATED BY STATUTE CLAIMED TO HAVE BEEN VIOLATED, PLAINTIFF HAS STANDING TO CHALLENGE ACTION IN FEDERAL COURT.

Plaintiff has standing to challenge an administrative action in federal court if challenged action caused it injury in fact and if the alleged injury was to an interest arguably within zone of interests to be protected or regulated by statute which agencies are claimed to have violated.

2. N.E.P.A.'S CONCERN IS WITH PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT, NOT WITH DESIRE OF PARTIES TO PREVENT OR DELAY ADMINISTRATIVE EFFORTS TO ENFORCE ANTITRUST LAWS; THEREFORE, PLAINTIFF HAD NO STANDING TO RAISE ISSUE OF F.T.C. COMPLIANCE WITH N.E.P.A. MANDATED PROCEDURES.

Plaintiff's desire to prevent or delay administrative efforts to enforce antitrust laws was not arguably within zone of interests to be protected or regulated by National Environmental Policy Act, and plaintiff seeking to challenge Commission's institution of adjudicatory proceeding against plaintiff had no standing to raise issue whether Commission had complied with procedures mandated by National Environmental Policy Act.

3. DECISION TO INSTITUTE ADJUDICATORY PROCEEDINGS IS NOT "AGENCY ACTION" AND MOST CERTAINLY NOT "FINAL AGENCY ACTION" MADE REVIEWABLE UNDER ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT.

Decision of Federal Trade Commission to institute adjudicatory proceedings against plaintiff was not "agency action" and most certainly not "final agency action" made reviewable by Administrative Procedure Act.

4. ACTION CHALLENGING F.T.C. ADJUDICATORY PROCEEDING ON GROUND OF NONCOMPLIANCE WITH N.E.P.A. WAS PREMATURE; ONLY IN EXTRAORDINARY CASES IS LITIGANT ALLOWED TO UNDERMINE CONGRESSIONALLY CREATED METHODS OF JUDICIAL REVIEW BY INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL.

Except in extraordinary cases, litigant is not allowed to undermine congressionally created method of judicial review of Federal Trade Commission decisions by bringing interlocutory appeal, even though that appeal be brought as an independent suit in district court, and company's challenge to Federal Trade Commission's adjudicatory proceeding on groung that Commission did not comply with National Environmental Policy Act was prèmature.

5. NATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY ACT DOES NOT ENCOMPASS AGENCY DECISIONS TO INSTITUTE ADJUDICATORY PROCEEDINGS OR A FORTIORI INSTITUTE INVESTIGATIONS TO DETERMINE WHETHER ADJUDICATION IS WARRANTED.

An agency's decision to institute adjudicatory proceedings, and a fortiori its decisions to institute investigations to determine whether adjudication is war[731]ranted are outside scope of National Environmental Policy Act.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 354 F.Supp. 521.)

On appeal from denial of preliminary injunction, court held that agency decision to institute adjudicatory proceedings or a fortiori to institute investigations to determine whether adjudication is warranted are outside the scope of the National Environmental Policy Act; plaintiff's desire to delay or prevent administrative enforcement of antitrust claim was not within area of interests protected or regulated by National Environmental Policy Act; and plaintiff had no standing to raise issue under the Act.

PER CURIAM:

The Federal Trade Commission has instituted an adjudicatory proceeding against plaintiff-appellant Gifford-Hill & Company. FTC Docket No. 8989 (August 7, 1974). In that proceeding the FTC will determine whether Gifford-Hill, a cement manufacturer, violated the antitrust laws by acquiring a producer of construction aggregates.[1] Following issuance of the FTC's administrative complaint, Gifford-Hill filed this suit in the District Court in an effort to have the complaint nullified on the ground that the decision to prosecute had been made without compliance with the procedures mandated by the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA), 42 U.S.C. §§ 4321-4347 (1970). The company claimed that before deciding to proceed with its complaint the FTC should have considered the possibility that undesirable environmental consequences might result from an eventual order requiring it to divest the aggregates producer.[2]

Gifford-Hill's motion for a preliminary injunction was denied, primarily because the District Court concluded that NEPA does not apply to the type of agency action at issue here and that plaintiff's probability of ultimate success on the merits was, therefore, too low to warrant issuing the injunction.[3] This appeal was taken from the denial of the preliminary injunction. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1) (1970). Without considering the merits of the NEPA complaint, we affirm.

[1] Gifford-Hill acquired the Becker Sand & Gravel Company, which strip mines sand and gravel, in 1972.

[2] The gravamen of Gifford-Hill's argument is that if it is forced to divest Becker, see note 1 supra, it will be compelled to open additional strip mines of its own in order to provide the materials it now receives from Becker's mines.

federal court if the challenged action caused it "injury in fact" and if "the alleged injury was to an interest 'arguably within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated' by the statutes that the agencies were claimed to have violated."[4] Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727, 733, 92 S.Ct. 1361, 1365, 31 L.Ed.2d 636 (1972); Barlow v. Collins, 397 U.S. 159, 90 S.Ct. 832, 25 L.Ed.2d 192 (1970); Ass'n of Data Processing Serv. Organizations v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 90 S.Ct. 827, 25 L.Ed.2d 184 (1970). Gifford-Hill satisfies the first of these criteria since the FTC's action puts the company to the expense of making its defense and subjects it to the risk of an adverse ruling by the Commission. This "injury in fact," however, does not affect an interest even arguably "within [732] the zone of interests to be protected or regulated" by NEPA. NEPA's concern is with protection of the environment, not with the desire of parties to prevent or delay administrative efforts to enforce the antitrust laws.[5] See Zlotnick v. District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency, D.D.C., 2 Envir.L.R. 20235, 20236 (1972), affirmed by order, 161 U.S. App.D.C. 238, 494 F.2d 1157 (1974).

Gifford-Hill bases its claim to have standing to raise the NEPA question primarily on National Helium Corp. v. Morton, 10 Cir., 455 F.2d 650 (1971), affirming, D.Kan., 326 F.Supp. 151 (1971), and on the cases which have followed that decision. Reply brief of appellant at 21-23. In Helium the Tenth Circuit held that the plaintiff company, which extracted helium from natural gas at the well site and sold the helium to the Government, had standing to challenge the failure of the Secretary of the Interior to file an environmental impact statement before cancelling the Government's contracts to purchase helium. The appellate court essentially agreed with the District Court's conclusion in Helium that although > [i]t may seem passing strange to see plaintiffs, the off-spring of corporate giants of the oil and gas industry, garbing themselves in the status of private attorneys general for the public interest, yet this Court perceives no valid reason why they cannot assert this role as protector of the public interest, along with their own. The Court finds that plaintiffs do have requisite standing to maintain this action. 326 F.Supp. at 157.

We have two substantial reasons for concluding that Helium and its progeny do not control this case. First, in Helium the mechanism of plaintiff's injury was directly and immediately related to the concerns of NEPA. National Helium's injury resulted from the cancellation of a Government program designed to encourage capture of helium at the well site in order to prevent that gas from being wasted and to assure an adequate supply of helium for necessary uses. As both the Tenth

[4] The Supreme Court has not had occasion to determine whether the "injury in fact" must be to an interest within the "zone of interests" protected by the statute, but the better interpretation of the language quoted in text and of Barlow and Ass'n of Data Processing Serv. Organizations is that such a congruence is required. See, e.g., F. Anderson, NEPA in the Courts 43 (1973); K. Davis, Administrative Law Treatise § 22.00-1 at 709 (Supp.1970).

[5] Gifford-Hill has not, of course, been able to allege that its use or enjoyment of the environment has been harmed or endangered by the FTC's action. Cf. Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727, 92 S.Ct. 1361, 31 L.Ed.2d 636 (1972).

Circuit and the District Court explained, the proper use and conservation of depletable natural resources are among NEPA's primary concerns. 455 F.2d at 655; 326 F.Supp. at 154-155. Thus, although the company and the statute were moved by different considerations, they shared a common interest in the helium purchase program. Gifford-Hill can point to no similar interest, shared by it and NEPA, which is injured by the FTC's decision to prosecute.

[3] The second reason for distinguishing Helium from the present case is that the former involved a challenge to an "agency action" under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), 5 U.S.C. §§ 702, 704 (1970). See 455 F.2d at 654; 326 F.Supp. at 154. As the Helium District Court explained, the APA's provision that "[a] person 'suffering legal wrong because of agency action, or adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action' " should have access to judicial review, 5 U.S.C. § 702, played a major role in the court's decision that National Helium had standing to raise the NEPA question. See 326 F.Supp. at 157, discussing Scanwell Laboratories, Inc. v. Shaffer, 137 U.S.App.D.C. 371, 424 F.2d 859 (1970). In the present case, however, Gifford-Hill must demonstrate its right to challenge the FTC's compliance with NEPA without the aid of the APA, since the decision to institute an adjudicatory proceeding is not an "agency action"—and most certainly not a "final agency action"—made reviewable by the latter statute. See 5 U.S.C. §§ 551(13), 702, 704.

II

[4] Our conclusion that the FTC's decision to initiate an adjudicatory pro[733]ceeding is not an action made reviewable by the APA indicates the second major difficulty with appellant's action: this suit is premature. Jurisdiction to review antitrust orders of the FTC is conferred on specified Courts of Appeals by 15 U.S.C. § 21(d) (1970). "All constitutional, jurisdictional, substantive, and procedural issues arising in Commission proceedings may be considered" in the statutory review proceeding. Frito-Lay, Inc. v. FTC, 5 Cir., 380 F.2d 8, 10 (1967). Except in extraordinary cases, there is no reason to allow a litigant to undermine this congressionally created method of judicial review of FTC decisions by bringing an interlocutory appeal, even though that appeal be brought as an independent suit in the District Court. Id.; cf. Ecology Action v. United States Atomic Energy Comm'n, 2 Cir., 492 F.2d 998 (1974); Thermal Ecology Must Be Preserved v. Atomic Energy Comm'n, 139 U.S.App.D.C. 366, 433 F.2d 524 (1970) (per curiam).

[5] The wisdom of this refusal to entertain most interlocutory appeals is well illustrated by the present case. Gifford-Hill's environmental claim is based on the possible result of a divestiture order which may never be entered, either because the challenged acquisition is found lawful or because some other remedy is deemed more appropriate. Moreover, during the adjudicatory proceeding both Gifford-Hill and the staff of the FTC can present evidence about environmental factors. That evidence can be considered as it relates to shaping a remedy, if the acquisition violates the antitrust laws, and the administrative law judge and the FTC can determine whether an environmental impact statement is required before a final order is entered.[6] In view of these opportunities for the FTC to comply with NEPA's requirements during the adjudicatory proceeding and of the ability of Gifford-Hill to challenge any failure to do so in its appeal from the Commission's final order, allowing this action to be maintained would serve no purpose other than the company's apparent desire for delay.[7]

For the foregoing reasons, the decision of the District Court is affirmed and the case is remanded with instructions to dismiss.

So ordered.

[7] We recognize that our holding effectively means that an agency's decisions to institute adjudicatory proceedings, and a fortiori its decisions to institute investigations to determine whether adjudication is warranted, are outside the scope of NEPA. Since these decisions in no way foreclose the agency from considering environmental factors before making a final decision to require some action, we are convinced that this result is proper. The decision to investigate or to adjudicate does not involve the type of "irretrievable commitment of resources" which NEPA insists must follow rather than precede consideration of environmental factors. *Cf. 1. THE STATUTORY FRAMEWORK PROVIDING OPPORTUNITY FOR TESTING VALIDITY OF STATUTES OR ADMINISTRATIVE ORDERS WITHOUT INCURRING PENALTIES IF SUIT IS LOST SATISFIES THE CONSTITUTIONAL REQUIREMENT OF DUE PROCESS RIGHT.

   One has due process right to contest validity of legislative or administrative order affecting his affairs without necessarily having to face ruinous penalties if suit is lost and this constitutional requirement is satisfied by statutory scheme which provides opportunity for testing validity of statutes or administrative orders without incurring prospect of debilitating or confiscatory penalties.

2. CIGARETTE COMPANIES ENTERING INTO CONSENT ORDERS WHICH WAIVED THEIR RIGHT TO FURTHER CHALLENGE DECREES' VALIDITY, WERE NOT ENTITLED TO STAY OF CUMULATIVE PENALTIES DURING RELATED ENFORCEMENT PROCEEDINGS.

   Where cigarette companies entered into consent decrees with Federal Trade Commission regarding health warning to be placed on cigarette advertising and waiving right to further challenge their validity, companies were not entitled to stay of cumulative penalties during proceedings relating to enforcement of those decrees.

3. ON MOTIONS FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTIONS ADDRESSED TO ITS DISCRETION, DISTRICT COURT DECISIONS SHOULD NOT BE DISTURBED, UNLESS ABUSE OF THAT DISCRETION IS SHOWN.

Motions for preliminary injunction are addressed to discretion of district court and its decision should not be disturbed unless abuse of discretion is shown.

In affirming the denial of appellants' motion for a stay of penalties, court held that where cigarette companies entered into Federal Trade Commission consent agreements waiving their rights to further challenge decrees' validity, they were not entitled to a stay of cumulative penalties during enforcement proceedings relating to the orders.

Before MULLIGAN, OAKES and MESKILL, Circuit Judges.

OAKES, Circuit Judge:

This appeal is from the denial of appellants' motion for a stay of penalties under Section 5(l) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(l) (1975 Supp.). The motion for a stay was sought by the six appellants who collectively produce about 99 per cent of the cigarettes manufactured in the United States. They have instituted declaratory judgment actions to obtain review of the Federal Trade Commission's interpretation of six cease and desist consent orders previously entered against them. Appellants have sought review prior to any enforcement proceedings brought by the FTC. The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, Charles H. Tenney, Judge, denied the motion for a stay. He concluded that appellants were not entitled to a stay as a matter of law and that they had failed to show that without the stay they will suffer irreparable injury or that the balance of the equities tipped decidedly in their favor. We affirm.[1]

The consent orders here involved were formally issued by the FTC on March 30, 1972. Essentially they require, in very detailed terms as to size of print, location, color and shape, that appellants include in their newspaper, magazine and other periodical advertising the now famous Surgeon General's warning reading [1117] "Warning: The Surgeon General has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health." The history underlying the consent orders is not particularly relevant for present purposes, so that it is set out only in the margin.[2] Suffice it to say that the orders were entered into after negotiations resulting from the FTC's serving appellants with proposed complaints charging them with deceptive practices under 15 U.S.C. § 45(a) for the failure to disclose in their advertising the hazards of using cigarettes. The important thing for our purposes is that in the consent order each of the appellants waived "any further procedural steps" and "all rights to seek judicial review or otherwise to challenge or contest the validity of the order entered pursuant to this agreement." It should also be mentioned that the consent orders required the submission of compliance reports. These reports were filed in September 1972, with the result that the FTC reported to Congress in December 1972 and January 1974 that industry practice was in substantial compliance with the orders. Subsequently, however, the FTC claimed that prior to and since September 1972 appellants had engaged in practices which did not comply with the consent orders' detailed requirements. Accordingly the Commission initiated a compliance investigation. From November 1974 through January 1975 attempts apparently were made to settle the FTC's claims of violations of the orders, but the settlement negotiations broke down. The companies claim that the FTC demanded too high a sum as a penalty for past violations and the FTC counters that such a sum was not a condition to further negotiation, and that appellants had refused to accept the staff's interpretation of the consent orders. On March 17, 1975, appellants asked the FTC Commissioners to reject the staff's interpretation. On August 1, 1975, the Commission, by letters to the companies, formally indicated that the Commissioners supported the staff's interpretation and that pursuant to the provisions of 15 U.S.C. § 56(a)[3] it would notify the Attorney General of its intention to commence an action for civil penalties and for other relief on the basis of these violations. The letters of August 1 stated, however, that for certain of the [1118] alleged violations of the orders the Commission would hold the civil penalty action in abeyance for 180 days.[4] Appellants thereafter, on August 14, 1975, commenced actions for a judgment declaring that the "determinations" in the Commission's letters of August 1 are inconsistent with the provisions of the orders and that the appellants are not liable for civil penalties. They also sought an order staying pending final judgment the accumulation of penalties for alleged violations of the orders under Section 5 of the Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45.[5] The six complaints were consolidated, since they contain identical questions of

[1] In the appellants' reply brief it was brought to our attention that the government filed civil enforcement actions in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia on October 17, 1975. We understand by correspondence from the parties that there are motions by the appellants here and defendants therein to have the civil enforcement action dismissed for lack of jurisdiction and for improper venue, or to have the action transferred to the Southern District of New York. We also are aware that by order dated November 5, 1975, Judge Tenney dismissed the complaints underlying the present appeal, on the basis that he would decline to exercise jurisdiction in the light of the enforcement action in the District of Columbia. Appellants have filed a notice of appeal therefrom and by letter have sought to consolidate that appeal with the instant one. Consolidation is opposed by the Government.

We have considered whether Judge Tenney's order dismissing the action has rendered the present appeal moot. We have concluded, however, that affirmance of the dismissal will not necessarily make this appeal moot because still at issue is the question whether penalties that possibly accrued prior to the commencement of the District of Columbia action or the dismissal of the underlying complaint here should be stayed. As to consolidation, since the appeal herein has already been argued, the more orderly procedure appears to be to consider the issue of preenforcement stay of penalties separately as it has arisen.

[2] As taken essentially from the affidavit of Eric M. Rubin, an FTC staff attorney, the history was as follows. In June, 1964, after the Surgeon General released the Report of his Advisory Committee on Smoking and Health, the FTC issued a proposed rule requiring the inclusion of a health warning in all cigarette labeling and advertising. Congress, however, adopted the Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act of 1965, Pub.L. No. 89-92, 79 Stat. 282, requiring a health warning on all cigarette packages, but barring until July 1, 1969, the FTC from requiring such a warning in cigarette advertising. 1965 U.S.Code Cong. Admin. News 2350, 2351. When that time expired the FTC again announced its intention to promulgate a trade regulation rule requiring a warning to be included in all cigarette advertising. Congress again intervened to enact the Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act of 1969, 15 U.S.C. § 1331 et seq. This act prohibited radio and television advertising of cigarette and little cigars after January 1, 1971, 15 U.S.C. § 1335, and foreclosed any action by the FTC "with respect to its pending trade regulation rule proceeding" before July 1, 1971, 15 U.S.C. § 1336(a). The Act also reaction in this area after July 1, 1971, the Commission had to give six months' notification to Congress of its determination to do so. But Congress specifically left untouched the FTC's authority with respect to unfair or deceptive cigarette advertising acts or practices. 15 U.S.C. § 1336(b). On July 1, 1971, the FTC served on each of the appellants individual complaints charging them with failure to disclose the Surgeon General's warning. Agreements containing consent orders agreeing to such disclosure were negotiated in January of 1972 and in March of 1972 the orders were finally issued and thereafter served.

[3] 15 U.S.C. § 56 provides in pertinent part:

> Whenever the Federal Trade Commission has reason to believe that any person, partnership, or corporation is liable to a penalty under section 54 of this title or under subsection (l) of section 45 of this title, it shall—
> (a) certify the facts to the Attorney General, whose duty it shall be to cause appropriate proceedings to be brought for the enforcement of the provisions of such section or subsection. . . .

[4] The alleged violations for which immediate notification of the Department of Justice was to be made included omission of the warnings in vending machine display panels; omission or undersizing in promotional materials such as counter racks and calendars; undersizing or mispositioning of the warning in newspaper, magazine and other periodical advertising; and, in connection with foreign language advertising, mistranslation of the warning or use of a different language therein.

[5] 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1) declares unfair or deceptive acts in commerce unlawful. The statute empowers and directs the Commission to prevent such acts, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(6). It authorizes the issuance of cease and desist complaints, provides for agency hearings thereon and affords review of FTC orders in the court of appeals. 15 U.S.C. § 45(b)-(d). The penalties for violation of orders are set forth in 15 U.S.C. § 45(l) as follows:

> Any person, partnership, or corporation who violates an order of the Commission after it has become final, and while such order is in effect, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than law, and after a hearing the court denied the motion for a stay of penalties, treating it essentially as an application for a preliminary injunction.

Appellants principally argue that they are entitled to a stay of the accrual of civil penalties as a matter of law. They do so on the basis of a series of Supreme Court decisions which commenced with Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 28 S.Ct. 441, 52 L.Ed. 714 (1908), and include Wadley Southern Railway Co. v. Georgia, 235 U.S. 651, 35 S.Ct. 214, 59 L.Ed. 405 (1915); Oklahoma Operating Co. v. Love, 252 U.S. 331, 40 S.Ct. 338, 64 L.Ed. 596 (1920), and St. Regis Paper Co. v. United States, 368 U.S. 208, 82 S.Ct. 289, 7 L.Ed.2d 240 (1961).[6] The argu[1119]ment is that a party whose conduct is made subject to administrative action must be given the opportunity to obtain a judicial test of the validity of such action and, further, as a matter of due process of law, cannot be subjected to the risk that substantial penalties will accumulate during the course of the judicial proceeding. This line of cases is based on the reasoning that, regardless of the ultimate determination on the merits, due process requires that some real opportunity to challenge administrative action be afforded, and that such opportunity cannot exist where penalties are so great that noncompliance and a judicial challenge cannot be risked. The argument is the more compelling, the appellants suggest, in connection with FTC statutory penalties due to recent decisions, including our own United States v. J. B. Williams Co., 498 F.2d 414, 435-36 (2d Cir. 1974), note 5 supra, which hold that penalties imposed for noncompliance with the Commission's cease and

Each separate violation of such an order shall be a separate offense, except that in the case of a violation through continuing failure to obey or neglect to obey a final order of the Commission, each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense. In such actions, the United States district courts are empowered to grant mandatory injunctions and such other and further equitable relief as they deem appropriate in the enforcement of such final orders of the Commission.

For a general discussion of the penalty mechanism, see United States v. J. B. Williams Co., 498 F.2d 414 (2d Cir. 1974), noted in 41 Brooklyn L.Rev. 792 (1975), 43 Geo.Wash.L.Rev. 307 (1975), 88 Harv.L.Rev. 1035 (1975).

[6] Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 28 S.Ct. 441, 52 L.Ed. 714 (1908), held that state statutes establishing maximum rail rates and providing large penalties (including imprisonment) for violation thereof were constitutionally invalid since the parties had been given no opportunity to contest validity of the rates and were effectively denied judicial review of the rates by the magnitude of the penalties. Id. at 147-48, 28 S.Ct. 441. Wadley Southern Ry. v. Georgia, 235 U.S. 651, 669, 35 S.Ct. 214, 59 L.Ed. 405 (1915), held that where a state railroad commission joint rate order was made after hearing and where the carrier did not avail itself of a "safe, adequate, and available" statutory judicial review to test the validity of the order, the statute authorizing a $5,000 a day penalty for violation was not invalid. Oklahoma Operating Co. v. Love, 252 U.S. 331, 40 S.Ct. 338, 64 L.Ed. 596 (1920), followed Young where there was no opportunity for judicial review of a state agency order. St. Regis Paper Co. v. United States, 368 U.S. 208, 82 S.Ct. 289, 7 L.Ed.2d 240 (1961), held that fixed statutory forfeitures of $100 per day for failure to file special reports in compliance with FTC orders were not invalid where "petitioner did not try to obtain judicial review prior to the commencement" of the Government's penalty action, and where the petitioner did not "seek a stay once the litigation had begun." Id. at 225, 82 S.Ct. at 299. The Court seemed to indicate that a declaratory judgment action would have lain to contest the validity of the orders and pointed out that even after the Government commenced the enforcement action a stay of penalties could have been but was not sought. Id. at 225-27, 82 S.Ct. 289.

desist order may be computed on the basis of a separate violation for each day and for each advertisement.[7] Appellants thus claim that the district court's endorsement of the Government's position in this case is directly contrary to definitive Supreme Court decisions which embody the rule that a stay of penalties is required during a good faith judicial challenge to an agency determination.

[1] Young, Wadley, Love and St. Regis, however, do not go as far as appellants suggest. Rather, they establish that one has a due process right to contest the validity of a legislative or administrative order affecting his affairs without necessarily having to face ruinous penalties if the suit is lost. The constitutional requirement is satisfied by a statutory scheme which provides an opportunity for testing the validity of statutes or administrative orders without incurring the prospect of debilitating or confiscatory penalties. As stated in St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. v. Williams, 251 U.S. 63, 65, 40 S.Ct. 71, 72, 64 L.Ed. 139 (1919), > where such an opportunity [to contest the validity] is afforded and the [statute or administrative order] is adjudged valid, or the carrier fails to avail itself of the opportunity [to contest the validity], it then is admissible, so far as due process of law is concerned, for the state to enforce adherence to the rate by imposing substantial penalties for deviations from it.

See St. Regis, supra, 368 U.S. at 226-27, 82 S.Ct. 289; Wadley, supra, 235 U.S. at 667-69, 35 S.Ct. 215. See also Ford Motor Co. v. Coleman, 402 F.Supp. 475 at 483-484 (D.D.C. 1975).

[2] Here the penalties which the appellants seek to have stayed did not attach prior to their opportunity to contest the validity of the orders. Rather, the risk of penalties began to accrue only after the appellants entered into consent decrees which acknowledged the validity of the decrees and waived the right further to challenge their validity. The statutory scheme of the Federal Trade Commission Act contemplates ample opportunity to the company accused of a deceptive practice to test the initial validity of the order. It can do so by seeking a review in the United States Court of Appeals. 15 U.S.C. § 45(c); note 5 supra; see United States v. J. B. Williams Co., supra, 498 F.2d at 419 (majority opinion) and at 441 (dissenting opinion). In the instant case, however, it is not the validity of the consent orders that appellants contest; rather it is their interpretation by the FTC. The question whether one is entitled to a stay of penalties as a matter of law in a suit involv[1120]ing the enforcement of an admittedly valid administrative order is not concluded by the Young line of cases. Appellants have pointed to no cases which support their proposition that at the compliance or enforcement stage they are still entitled to a stay. The only cases in which the argument has been made have not accepted it, although they hardly have the weight here that the Commission would attribute to them. See Floersheim v. Weinberger, 346 F.Supp. 950, 956 (D.D.C.1972), modified on other grounds and aff'd sub nom. Floersheim v. Engman, 161 U.S.App.D.C. 30, 494 F.2d 949 (D.C.Cir. 1973); United States v. Beatrice Foods Co., 322 F.Supp. 139, 141 n. 1 (D.Minn.1971).

[7] Appellants argue that in the complaints filed in the District of Columbia enforcement action the FTC claims that each copy of every advertisement constitutes a separate violation of the consent order. On this basis, appellants urge that the potential liability for an advertisement in the Sunday New York Daily News with a circulation of 3 million is $30 billion. Their point that substantial penalties may be involved is made even-though we need not accept their characterization of the FTC complaint.

We agree, of course, with the principle enunciated by the Supreme Court in Wadley Southern Railway Co. v. Georgia, supra, 235 U.S. at 661, 35 S.Ct. 215, that a right of judicial review is merely "nominal and illusory" if it must be exercised "only at the risk of having to pay penalties so great that it is better to yield to orders of uncertain legality rather than to ask for the protection of the law." But the legality of the orders here is entirely certain. The penalties are accruing in this case, if at all, only by virtue of noncompliance with perfectly valid administrative orders. At this stage the right of the government to impose fines and penalties for violation of the laws appears equally indisputable. As Wadley states, "there is no room to doubt the power of the state to impose a punishment heavy enough to secure obedience to such orders after they have been found to be lawful; nor to impose a penalty for acts of disobedience, committed after the carrier had ample opportunity to test the validity of administrative orders and failed so to do." 235 U.S. at 667, 35 S.Ct. at 220. Cf. Calero-Toledo v. Pierson Yacht Leasing Co., 416 U.S. 663, 684-85 n. 24, 94 S.Ct. 2080, 40 L.Ed.2d 452 (1974).

Appellants argue, of course, that it is the risk of huge accumulating penalties during the course of the enforcement proceedings in this case which calls into play the Supreme Court cases and requires the granting of the temporary relief sought. But while the cumulative aspect of Section 45(l) penalties is severe, see United States v. J. B. Williams Co., supra, 498 F.2d at 435-36, it very plainly was the view of Congress that such cumulative penalties might be the only way to enforce FTC orders in the face of profitable, repeated or continuing violations. See 96 Cong.Rec. 2974 (1950) (remarks of Congressman Cooley); id. at 2981 (remarks of Congressman Posage); id. at 3018-19 (remarks of Senator George); id. at 3025 (remarks of Senator Aiken). The legislative history of the Act, according to United States v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 420 U.S. 223, 231, 95 S.Ct. 926, 932, 43 L.Ed.2d 148 (1975), > makes clear that Congress was concerned with avoiding a situation in which the statutory penalty would be regarded by potential violators of FTC orders as nothing more than an acceptable cost of violation, rather than as a deterrence to violation. For example, Senator Aiken, chief proponent of the 1950 amendment, said that if daily penalties for certain violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act were not permitted, "the fine would amount to a license in the amount of $5,000 for misrepresentation, which would be a very cheap fine, indeed."

The cumulative penalty sections of Section 45(l) were held to be fair in ITT Continental Baking Co. because they were reasonably related to deterring cumulative violations of FTC orders in two situations: first, where detriment to the public and the advantage to the violator increases with delay of enforcement; and, second, where there exists a continuing ability on the part of the violator to eliminate the effects of his violation if so motivated. 420 U.S. at 232-33, 95 S.Ct. 926. We are satisfied, therefore, that § 45(l) cumulative penalties are not violative of due process under the circumstances of this case and that appellants are not entitled to a stay of [1121] penalties as a matter of law. We may point out in passing that while § 45 penalties are cumulative, they are also subject to the limitation of judicial discretion upon the penalties imposed.[8] Moreover, our own decision in United States v. J. B. Williams Co., supra, held that in any penalty action there is a right to jury trial on contested issues of fact.

[3,4] Appellants also argue that even under the district court's approach of treating the motion for a stay as an application for preliminary injunction they are entitled to relief. We need not again set forth our settled rule that to obtain such relief the litigant must either demonstrate a combination of probable success on the merits and the possibility of irreparable injury or, in the alternative, that he has raised serious questions going to the merits and that the balance of hardships tips "decidedly" in his favor. San Filippo v. United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, 525 F.2d 508, 511 (2d Cir. 1975), 6387, 6392; Stamicarbon, N. V. v. American Cyanamid Co., 506 F.2d 532, 536 (2d Cir. 1974). Ultimately these motions are addressed to the discretion of the district court and its decision should not be disturbed unless an abuse of discretion is shown. In this regard, and particularly in this type of case, we must recall that courts of equity may go much further both to give or to withhold relief in furtherance of the public interest than where only private interests are involved. See Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 156, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 18 L.Ed.2d 681

[8] Indicative of this are the following statements from the floor which attended passage of the 1950 Amendment to 15 U.S.C. § 45(l):

> [I]t is inconceivable to me that any Federal court would impose penalties under this section which are not reasonably related both to the seriousness of the offense charged and the size and resources of the defendant.

96 Cong.Rec. 2974, 3026 (1950) (letter from W. T. Kelley, General Counsel, FTC, to Senator Fulbright).

> In no event would the court sanction any unreasonable penalty, or any such total penalty as would be destructive of legitimate business. So, therefore, I do not think there is any real danger here to legitimate business.

96 Cong.Rec. 3019 (1950) (remarks of Senator George).

The courts have recognized the limitation inherent in this section. See United States v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 420 U.S. 223, 229 n. 6, 95 S.Ct. 926, 930 (1975) (". . . the statutes prescribe no minimum penalty, and the District Court has discretion to determine the amount of the penalty for each violation whether the transactions are construed as single or as continuing violations"). See also United States v. J. B. Williams Co., 498 F.2d 414, 438 (2d Cir. 1974); Floersheim v. Engman, 494 F.2d 949, 952-54 (D.C.Cir. 1973); Ford Motor Co. v. Coleman, 404 F.Supp. 475 at 489 (D.D.C. 1975).

(1967); Yakus v. United States, 321 U.S. 414, 441, 64 S.Ct. 660, 88 L.Ed. 834 (1944); Gulf & Western Industries, Inc. v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 476 F.2d 687, 699 (2d Cir. 1973).

We agree with Judge Tenney below that appellants have doubtless posed a serious question on the merits. However, the limitations on the imposition of Section 45(l) penalties which we have discussed above, see, e. g., Floersheim v. Engman, 494 F.2d 949, 953 (D.C.Cir. 1973) ("There is room for leniency by the court, if petitioner's view of the meaning of the order is plausible and not defiant"), coupled with the strong public interest militating against the stay, preclude any finding that appellants have met their burden of showing that the equities tipped decidedly in their favor. We agree with the court in Floersheim v. Engman, supra, that the "equitable limitations inherent in the Government's remedies are a substantial protection for a respondent with a reasonable and bona fide claim." See note 8 supra. We also are of the view that if appellants' interpretation of the consent orders is incorrect, granting the stay would infringe the public interest in receiving adequate warnings on the hazards of cigarette smoking. We put no stock in the intimation in the appellants' brief that the public interest is not involved because Congress has specifically required warnings on cigarette packages but not on [1122] advertising. See note 2 supra. Nowhere has Congress suggested that the FTC should not continue to handle the matter of cigarette advertising, and deceptive advertising practices in general, within the confines of its existing complaint procedures under Section 45. See note 2 supra. It may be, as appellants claim, that the Commission's views on noncompliance relate to alleged "minuscule variations in type size and type style" and "to technical aspects" of the consent orders, but the Surgeon General's warning is a serious message which substantially affects the public interest. Noncompliance with the Commission's order is not a matter lightly to be endured.

Judgment affirmed.

(United States District Court, Southern District of New York, December 31, 1975)

On motion for preenforcement review, court held that under the authority of Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440, preenforcement review motion of plaintiff banks on the legality of subpoenas issued by F.T.C. in connection with its investigation of the energy industry should be denied.

Shearman & Sterling, New York, N.Y., for plaintiff.

Before FRANKEL, District Judge.

MEMORANDUM

In these consolidated cases, plaintiff banks, having exhausted their administrative appeals, seek preenforcement review of the legality of subpoenas issued by the FTC in connection with its investigation of the energy industry. The FTC's motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and failure to state a claim is now before the court.

The motion to dismiss has generated a series of careful, learned, enlightening memoranda of law, for which the court is grateful. In the end, however, the case seems simple for our nisi prius purposes. While there may be questions still open or subject to elaboration at higher levels, controlling precedent appears to support the motion. Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440 (1964); Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. FTC, 359 F.2d 487 (8th Cir. 1966). Cases involving preenforcement review of regulations, not subpoenas, e.g., Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136 (1967), seem distinguishable on grounds that defendants brief. In any event, neither those cases nor any others cited cast the slightest doubt upon the continued validity for our purposes of Reisman v. Caplin, supra.

* Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 60, 671 at 67,936 (1975-2 Trade Cases).

Proposed distinctions of Reisman are not persuasive. As to the threat of criminal penalties, it might be enough to say that corporations, the only species of plaintiff we have here, are apparently not subject to them. St. Regis Paper Co. v. United States 368 U.S. 208, 221 (1961). In any event, the problem is directly covered, again, in the Reisman decision. Plaintiffs attempt a chain of reasoning linked to a difference in conjunctions—an "or" in Internal Revenue Code § 7210 versus an "and" in § 10 of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 50. The semantical argument is strained at best. In the absence of evidence that anyone in Congress ever noticed the difference, or meant it to be significant in any pertinent sense, the contention built upon it must fail.

Further on the supposed danger of criminal liability, the court finds unpersuasive the assertion by some of the plaintiffs that the mere bringing of a preenforcement action somehow demonstrates plaintiffs' "good faith" in refusing to comply with the subpoenas, and thereby protects them from potential criminal penalties under section 10 of the FTC Act.

Allowing review of the kind sought here seems especially unjustified now that the Commission has brought the usual form of enforcement proceedings wherein any proper issues the banks propose as plaintiffs may be tendered to support their resistance as respondents.

In short, without retracing all of the doctrine explored in the briefs, the court holds that the complaints in these cases should be, and they are, dismissed.

It is so ordered.

PENALTY PROCEEDINGS

United States v. Smith Fencer Corp., et al.—United States District Court, Eastern District of Michigan, Southern District (Flint); judgment in the amount of $3,250 was entered March 23, 1971, upon thirteen counts of the complaint involving violation of an order relating to electric fence controllers. STATUTES

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

[Public No. 203, 63D Congress, Approved September 26, 1914 (38 Stat. 717; 15 U.S.C. 41, et seq.), as Amended[1]]

AN ACT To create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

CREATION AND ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COMMISSION[2] (38 Stat. 717; 15 U.S.C. 41; 52 Stat. 111).

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission), which shall be composed of five Commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than three of the Commissioners shall be members of the same political party. The first Commissioners appointed shall continue in office for terms of three, four, five, six, and seven years, respectively, from the date of the taking effect of this Act, the term of each to be designated by the President, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of seven years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the Commissioner whom he shall succeed: Provided, however, That upon the expiration of his term of office a Commissioner shall continue to serve until his successor shall have been appointed and shall have qualified. The Commission shall choose a Chairman from its own membership.[3]

Restriction.

No Commissioner shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment.

Removal; vacancies.

Any Commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. A vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining Commissioners to exercise all the powers of the Commission.

SALARIES, EMPLOYEES. EXPENSES OF THE COMMISSION (38 Stat. 718; 15 U.S.C. 42).

Salaries.

Sec. 2. The Commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive a salary payable in the same manner as the salaries of the judges of the courts of the United States, and it shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of such attorneys, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper performance of its duties and as may be from time to time appropriated for by Congress.[4]

With the exception of the secretary, a clerk to each Commissioner, the attorneys, and such special experts and examiners as the Commission may from time to time find necessary for the conduct of its work, all employees of the Commission shall be a part of the classified civil service, and shall enter the service under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commission and by the Civil Service Commission.

[3] Under the provisions of section 3 of Reorganization Plan No. 8 of 1950, effective May 24, 1950, 15 F.R. 3175, 64 Stat. 1264, the functions of the Commission with respect to choosing a Chairman from among the membership of the Commission was transferred to the President. Under said plan, prepared by the President and transmitted to the Senate and House on March 13, 1950, pursuant to the provisions of the Reorganization Act of 1949, approved June 20, 1949, there were also transferred from the Commission to the Chairman of the Commission, subject to certain limitations, "the executive and administrative functions of the Commission, including functions of the Commission with respect to (1) the appointment and supervision of personnel employed under the Commission, (2) the distribution of business among such personnel and among administrative units of the Commission, and (3) the use and expenditure of funds."

Under the provisions of section 1 of Reorganization Plan No. 4 of 1961, effective July 9, 1961, 26 F.R. 6191, 75 Stat. 837, the Commission, retaining a discretionary right to review, was authorized "to delegate, by published order or rule, any of its functions * * *." In addition, there were transferred from the Commission to the Chairman of the Commission the functions of the Commission with respect to the assignment of Commission personnel, including Commissioners, to perform such functions as may have been delegated by the Commission to Commission personnel, including Commissioners.

[4] The provisions of this section prescribing the annual basic compensation of the Commissioners are omitted to conform to the provisions of the Federal Executive Salary Schedule. See 5 U.S.C. § 5311 et seq. The June 10, 1921, Act omitted a salary of $5,000 for the secretary.

Application of civil service laws.

All of the expenses of the Commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the Commissioners or by their employees under their orders, in making any investigation, or upon official business in any other places than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the Commission.

Payment of expenses

Until otherwise provided by law, the Commission may rent suitable offices for its use.

The General Accounting Office shall receive and examine all accounts of expenditures of the Commission.[5]

Auditing accounts.

BUREAU OF CORPORATIONS. OFFICE OF THE COMMISSION. PROSECUTION OF INQUIRIES (38 Stat. 718; 15 U.S.C. 43).

Sec. 3. Upon the organization of the Commission and election of its Chairman, the Bureau of Corporations and the offices of Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Corporations shall cease to exist; and all pending investigations and proceedings of the Bureau of Corporations shall be continued by the Commission.

Bureau of Corporations abolished.

Authority vested in the Commission.

All clerks and employees of the said bureau shall be transferred to and become clerks and employees of the Commission at their present grades and salaries. All records, papers, and property of the said bureau shall become records, papers, and property of the Commission, and all unexpended funds and appropriations for the use, and maintenance of the said bureau, including any allotment already made to it by the Secretary of Commerce from the contingent appropriation for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year nineteen hundred and fifteen, or from the departmental printing fund for the fiscal year nineteen hundred and fifteen, shall become funds and appropriations available to be expended by the Commission in the exercise of the powers, authority, and duties conferred on it by this Act.

Inquiries elsewhere.

The principal office of the Commission shall be in the city of Washington, but it may meet and exercise all its powers at any other place. The Commission may, by one or more of its members, or by such examiners as it may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties in any part of the United States.

"COMMERCE," ETC. DEFINED (38 Stat. 719; 52 Stat. 111; 15 U.S.C. 44).

Sec. 4. The words defined in this section shall have the following meaning when found in this Act, to wit:

"Commerce."

"Commerce" means commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or in any Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia, or between any such Territory and another, or between any such Territory and any State or foreign nation, or between the District of Columbia and any State or Territory or foreign nation.

"Corporation."

"Corporation" shall be deemed to include any company, trust, so-called Massachusetts trust, or association, incorporated or unincorporated, which is organized to carry on business for its own profit or that of its members, and has shares of capital or capital stock or certificates of interest, and any company, trust, so-called Massachusetts trust, or association, incorporated or unincorporated, without shares of capital or capital stock or certificates of interest, except partnerships, which is organized to carry on business for its own profit or that of its members.

"Documentary evidence."

"Documentary evidence" includes all documents, papers, correspondence, books of account, and financial and corporate records.

"Acts to regulate commerce."

"Acts to regulate commerce" means the Act entitled "An Act to regulate commerce", approved February 14,[6] 1887, and all Acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto and the Communications Act of 1934 and all Acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

"Antitrust Acts"

"Antitrust Acts" means the Act entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies", approved July 2, 1890; also sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of an Act entitled "An Act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes", approved August 27, 1894; also the Act entitled "An Act to amend sections 73 and 76 of the Act of August 27, 1894, entitled 'An Act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes' ", approved February 12, 1913; and also the Act entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914.

[8] Public No. 85-909, 85th Cong., approved Sept. 2, 1958, amended the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, as amended (7 U.S.C. 226, 227, and 72 Stat. 1749, 1750) by striking out subsec. (b) of sec. 406 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) The Federal Trade Commission shall have power and jurisdiction over any matter involving meat, meat food products, livestock products in unmanufactured form, or poultry products, which by this Act is made subject to the power or jurisdiction of the Secretary, as follows:

"(1) When the Secretary in the exercise of his duties requests of the Commission that it make investigations and reports in any case.

"(2) In any investigation of, or proceeding for the prevention of, an alleged violation of any Act administered by the Commission, arising out of acts or transactions involving meat, meat food products, livestock products in unmanufactured form, or poultry products, if the Commission determines that effective exercise of its power or jurisdiction with respect to retail sales of any such commodities is or will be impaired by the absence of power or jurisdiction over all acts or transactions involving such commodities in such investigation or proceeding. In order to avoid unnecessary duplication of effort by the Government and burdens upon the industry, the Commissioner shall notify the Secretary of such determination, the reasons therefor, and the acts or transactions involved, and shall not exercise power or jurisdiction with regard to acts or transactions (other than retail sales) involving such commodities if the Secretary within ten days from the date of receipt of the notice notifies the Commission that there is pending in his Department an investigation of, or proceeding for the prevention of, an alleged violation of this Act involving the same subject matter.

"(3) Over all transactions in commerce in margarine or oleomargarine and over retail sales of meat, meat food products, livestock products in unmanufactured form, and poultry products.

"(c) The Federal Trade Commission shall have no power or jurisdiction over any matter which by this Act is made subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary, except as provided in subsection (b) of this section."

Intervention by other parties. Testimony.

shown may be allowed by the Commission to intervene and appear in said proceeding by counsel or in person. The testimony in any such proceeding shall be reduced to writing and filed in the office of the Commission. If upon such hearing the Commission shall be of the opinion that the method of competition or the act or practice in question is prohibited by this Act, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts and shall issue and cause to be served on such person, partnership, or corporation an order requiring such person, partnership, or corporation to cease and desist from using such method of competition or such act or practice. Until the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for review, if no such petition has been duly filed within such time, or, if a petition for review has been filed within such time then until the record in the proceeding has been filed in a court of appeals of the United States, as hereinafter provided the Commission may at any time, upon such notice and in such manner as it shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any report or any order made or issued by it under this section. After the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for review, if no such petition has been duly filed within such time, the Commission may at any time, after notice and opportunity for hearing, reopen and alter, modify, or set aside, in whole or in part, any report or order made or issued by it under this section, whenever in the opinion of the Commission conditions of fact or of law have so changed as to require such action or if the public interest shall so require: Provided, however, That the said person, partnership, or corporation may, within sixty days after service upon him or it of said report or order entered after such a reopening, obtain a review thereof in the appropriate court of appeals of the United States, in the manner provided in subsection (c) of this section.

or practice may obtain a review of such order in the court of appeals of the United States within any circuit where the method of competition or the act or practice in question was used or where such person, partnership, or corporation resides or carries on business, by filing in the court, within sixty days from the date of the service of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall file in the court the record in the proceeding, as provided in Section 2112 of Title 28, United States Code. Upon such filing of the petition the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein concurrently with the Commission until the filing of the record and shall have power to make and enter a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the Commission, and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed, and to issue such writs as are ancillary to its jurisdiction or are necessary in its judgment to prevent injury to the public or to competitors pendente lite. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive. To the extent that the order of the Commission is affirmed, the court shall thereupon issue its own order commanding obedience to the terms of such order of the Commission. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order, with the return of such additional evidence. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subjected to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari, as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code.[9]

Judgment and decree final; review by Supreme Court.

Exclusive jurisdiction of the court of appeals.

(d) Upon the filing of the record with it the jurisdiction of the court of appeals of the United States to affirm, enforce, modify, or set aside orders of the Commission shall be exclusive.

Proceedings given precedence.

(e) Such proceedings in the court of appeals shall be given precedence over other cases pending therein, and shall be in every way expedited. No order of the Commission or judgment of court to enforce the same shall in anywise relieve or absolve any person, partnership, or corporation from any liability under the Antitrust Acts.

Service of processes.

(f) Complaints, orders, and other processes of the Commission under this section may be served by anyone duly authorized by the Commission, either (a) by delivering a copy thereof to the person to be served, or to a member of the partnership to be served, or the president, secretary, or other executive officer or a director of the corporation to be served; or (b) by leaving a copy thereof at the residence or principal office or place of business of such person, partnership, or corporation; or (c) by mailing a copy thereof by registered mail or by certified mail addressed to such person, partnership, or corporation at his or its residence or principal office or place of business. The verified return by the person so serving said complaint, order, or other process setting forth the manner of said service shall be proof of the same, and the return post office receipt for said complaint, order, or other process mailed by registered mail or by certified mail as aforesaid shall be proof of the service of the same.

Verified return; proof of service.

[9] Section 240 of the Judicial Code was repealed by the Act of June 25, 1948, Chapter 646, Sec. 39, 62 Stat. 992. Similar provisions are contained in section 1254 of Title 28 of the U.S. Code.

tion has been duly filed within such time; but the Commission may thereafter modify or set aside its order to the extent provided in the last sentence of subsection (b); or Upon expiration of time for filing petition for certiorari.

(2) Upon the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for certiorari, if the order of the Commission has been affirmed, or the petition for review dismissed by the court of appeals, and no petition for certiorari has been duly filed; or Upon denial of petition for certiorari.

(3) Upon the denial of a petition for certiorari, if the order of the Commission has been affirmed or the petition for review dismissed by the court of appeals; or

Supreme Court mandate affirming Commission order.

(4) Upon the expiration of thirty days from the date of issuance of the mandate of the Supreme Court, if such Court directs that the order of the Commission be affirmed or the petition for review dismissed.

Order modified or set aside by Supreme Court.

(h) If the Supreme Court directs that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside, the order of the Commission rendered in accordance with the mandate of the Supreme Court shall become final upon the expiration of thirty days from the time it was rendered, unless within such thirty days either party has instituted proceedings to have such order corrected to accord with the mandate, in which event the order of the Commission shall become final when so corrected.

By court of appeals; when final.

(i) If the order of the Commission is modified or set aside by the court of appeals, and if (1) the time allowed for filing a petition for certiorari has expired and no such petition has been duly filed, or (2) the petition for certiorari has been denied, or (3) the decision of the court has been affirmed by the Supreme Court, then the order of the Commission rendered in accordance with the mandate of the court of appeals, shall become final on the expiration of thirty days from the time such order of the Commission was rendered, unless within such thirty days either party has instituted proceedings to have such order corrected so that it will accord with the mandate, in which event the order of the Commission shall become final when so corrected.

Rehearing.

(j) If the Supreme Court orders a rehearing; or if the case is remanded by the court of appeals to the Commission for a rehearing, and if (1) time allowed for filing a petition for certiorari has expired, and no such petition has been duly filed, or (2) the petition for certiorari has been denied, or (3) the decision of the court has been affirmed by the Supreme Court, then the order of the Commission rendered upon such rehearing shall become final in the same manner as though no prior order of the Commission had been rendered.

"Mandate."

(k) As used in this section the term "mandate," in case a mandate has been recalled prior to the expiration of thirty days from the date of issuance thereof, means the final mandate.

Penalty for violation.

(l) Any person, partnership, or corporation who violates an order of the Commission after it has become final, and while such order is in effect, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 for each violation, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the Attorney General of the United States. Each separate violation of such an order shall be a separate offense, except that in the case of a violation through continuing failure to obey or neglect to obey a final order of the Commission, each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense. In such actions, the United States district courts are empowered to grant mandatory injunctions and such other and further equitable relief as they deem appropriate in the enforcement of such final orders of the Commission.

Courts empowered to grant mandatory injunctions.

Penalty action for violation of rule.

(m) (1) (A) The Commission may commence a civil action to recover a civil penalty in a district court of the United States against any person, partnership, or corporation which violates any rule under this Act respecting unfair or deceptive acts or practices (other than an interpretive rule or a rule violation of which the Commission has provided is not an unfair or deceptive act or practice in violation of subsection (a) (1)) with actual knowledge or knowledge fairly implied on the basis of objective circumstances that such act is unfair or deceptive and is prohibited by such rule. In such action, such person, partnership, or corporation shall be liable for a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 for each violation.

(B) If the Commission determines in a proceeding under subsection (b) that any act or practice is unfair or deceptive, and issues a final cease and desist order with respect to such act or practice, then the Commission may commence a civil action to obtain a civil penalty in a district court of the United States against any person, partnership, or corporation which engages in such act or practice—

Penalty action for violation of order to cease and desist.

(1) after such cease and desist order becomes final (whether or not such person, partnership, or corporation was subject to such cease and desist order), and

(2) with actual knowledge that such act or practice is unfair or deceptive and is unlawful under subsection (a) (1) of this section.

In such action, such person, partnership, or corporation shall be liable for a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 for each violation.

Daily penalties.

(C) In the case of a violation through continuing failure to comply with a rule or with section 5 (a) (1), each day of continuance of such failure shall be treated as a separate violation, for purposes of subparagraphs (A) and (B). In determining the amount of such a civil penalty, the court shall take into account the degree of culpability, any history of prior such conduct, ability to pay, effect on ability to continue to do business, and such other matters as justice may require.

(2) If the cease and desist order establishing that the act or practice is unfair or deceptive was not issued against the defendant in a civil penalty action under paragraph (1) (B) the issues of fact in such action against such defendant shall be tried de novo.

Issues of fact tried de novo.

Compromise settlement with public statement.

(3) The Commission may compromise or settle any action for a civil penalty if such compromise or settlement is accompanied by a public statement of its reasons and is approved by the court.[10]

INVESTIGATORY AND RELATED POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION (38 Stat. 721; 87 Stat. 592; 88 Stat. 2193, 2198; 15 U.S.C. 46).

Additional powers.

Sec. 6. The Commission shall also have power—

Investigating business operations, etc., of corporations.

(a) To gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices, and management of any person, partnership, or corporation engaged in or whose business affects commerce, excepting banks and common carriers subject to the Act to regulate commerce, and its relation to other persons, partnerships, and corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships.

Requiring detailed reports, etc., from corporations.

(b) To require, by general or special orders, persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in or whose business affects commerce, excepting banks, and common carriers subject to the Act to regulate commerce, or any class of them, or any of them, respectively, to file with the Commission in such form as the Commission may prescribe annual or special, or both annual and special, reports or answers in writing to specific questions, furnishing to the Commission such information as it may require as to the organization, business, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other corporations, partnerships, and individuals of the respective persons, partnerships, and corporations filing such reports or answers in writing. Such reports and answers shall be made under oath, or otherwise, as the Commission may prescribe, and shall be filed with the Commission within such reasonable period as the Commission may prescribe, unless additional time be granted in any case by the Commission.

(c) Whenever a final decree has been entered against any defendant corporation in any suit brought by the United States to prevent and restrain any violation of the antitrust Acts, to make

[10] Section 205(b) of Public Law 93-637 provided that the amendment made by section 205(a) [enacting provisions of subsection (m) relating to civil penalties] did not apply to any violation, act, or practice to the extent that such violation, act, or practice occurred before the date of enactment of the Act (January 4, 1975).

To investigate compliance with anti-trust decrees.

Transmittal of findings, etc.

investigation, upon its own initiative, of the manner in which the decree has been or is being carried out, and upon the application of the Attorney General it shall be its duty to make such investigation. It shall transmit to the Attorney General a report embodying its findings and recommendations as a result of any such investigation, and the report shall be made public in the discretion of the Commission.

Investigations for the President or the Congress.

(d) Upon the direction of the President or either House of Congress to investigate and report the facts relating to any alleged violations of the antitrust Acts by any corporation.

Recommend business adjustments to comply with the law.

(e) Upon the application of the Attorney General to investigate and make recommendations for the readjustment of the business of any corporation alleged to be violating the antitrust Acts in order that the corporation may thereafter maintain its organization, management, and conduct of business in accordance with law.

To make public portions of information obtained.

Publishing reports, etc.

(f) To make public from time to time such portions of the information obtained by it hereunder, except trade secrets and names of customers, as it shall deem expedient in the public interest; and to make annual and special reports to the Congress and to submit therewith recommendations for additional legislation; and to provide for the publication of its reports and decisions in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use.

Classifying corporations.

(g) From time to time to classify corporations and (except as provided in section 18 (a) (2) of this Act) to make rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act.

Investigating conditions abroad affecting foreign trade.

(h) To investigate, from time to time, trade conditions in and with foreign countries where associations, combinations, or practices of manufacturers, merchants, or traders, or other conditions, may affect the foreign trade of the United States, and to report to Congress thereon, with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

Investigative powers.

Provided, That the exception of "banks and common carriers subject to the Act to regulate commerce" from the Commission's powers defined in clauses (a) and (b) of this section, shall not be construed to limit the Commission's authority to gather and compile information, to investigate, or to require reports or answers from, any person, partnership, or corporation to the extent that such action is necessary to the investigation of any person, partnership, or corporation, group of persons, partnerships, or corporations, or industry which is not engaged or is engaged only incidentally in banking or in business as a common carrier subject to the Act to regulate commerce.

REFERRAL OF ANTITRUST SUITS TO COMMISSION (38 Stat. 722; 15 U.S.C. 47).

Formulation of decrees in antitrust suits.

Sec. 7. In any suit in equity brought by or under the direction of the Attorney General as provided in the antitrust Acts, the court may, upon the conclusion of the testimony therein, if it shall be then of opinion that the complainant is entitled to relief, refer said suit to the Commission, as a master in chancery, to ascertain and report an appropriate form of decree therein. The Commission shall proceed upon such notice to the parties and under such rules of procedure as the court may prescribe, and upon the coming in of such report such exceptions may be filed and such proceedings had in relation thereto as upon the report of a master in other equity causes, but the court may adopt or reject such report, in whole or in part, and enter such decree as the nature of the case may in its judgment require.

Action of court.

INFORMATION AND ASSISTANCE FROM OTHER DEPARTMENTS AND BUREAUS (38 Stat. 722; 15 U.S.C. 48).

Departments and bureaus to cooperate.

Sec. 8 The several departments and bureaus of the Government when directed by the President shall furnish the Commission, upon its request, all records, papers, and information in their possession relating to any corporation subject to any of the provisions of this Act, and shall detail from time to time such officials and employees to the Commission as he may direct.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE; SUBPOENAS; WITNESSES (38 Stat. 722; 84 Stat. 929; 88 Stat. 2198; 15 U.S.C. 49).

Power to secure testimony.

Sec. 9. For the purposes of this Act the Commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documentary evidence of any person, partnership, or corporation being investigated or proceeded against; and the Commission shall have power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation. Any member of the Commission may sign subpoenas, and members and examiners of the Commission may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

Issuance of subpoenas, etc.

Attendance of witnesses.

Such attendance of witnesses, and the production of such documentary evidence, may be required from any place in the United States, at any designated place of hearing. And in case of disobedience to a subpoena the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence.

District courts to enforce compliance.

Any of the district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to any person, partnership, or corporation, issue an order requiring such person, partnership, or corporation, to appear before the Commission, or to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

Writs of mandamus to compel compliance with Act.

Upon the application of the Attorney General of the United States, at the request of the Commission, the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person, partnership, or corporation to comply with the provisions of this Act or any order of the Commission made in pursuance thereof.

Testimony by deposition.

The Commission may order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation pending under this Act at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person designated by the Commission and having power to administer oaths. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the Commission as hereinbefore provided.

Compulsory appearance, etc.

Witnesses summoned before the Commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States, and witnesses whose depositions are taken and the persons taking the same shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

Fees, etc. of witnesses.

OFFENSES AND PENALTIES (38 Stat. 723; 62 Stat. 909; 88 Stat. 2199; 15 U.S.C. 50).

Sec. 10. Any person who shall neglect or refuse to attend and testify, or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce documentary evidence, if in his power to do so, in obedience to the subpoena or lawful requirement of the Commission, shall be guilty of an offense and upon conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Punishment for disobeying subpoenas, etc.

Any person who shall willfully make, or cause to be made, any false entry or statement of fact in any report required to be made under this Act, or who shall willfully make, or cause to be made, any false entry in any account, record, or memorandum kept by any person, partnership, or corporation subject to this Act, or who shall willfully neglect or fail to make, or to cause to be made, full, true, and correct entries in such accounts, records, or memoranda of all facts and transactions appertaining to the business of such person, partnership, or corporation, or who shall willfully remove out of the jurisdiction of the United States, or willfully mutilate, alter, or by any other means falsify any documentary evidence of such person, partnership, or corporation, or who shall willfully refuse to submit to the Commission or to any of its authorized agents, for the purpose of inspection and taking copies, any documentary evidence of such person, partnership, or corporation in his possession or within his control, shall be deemed guilty of an offense against the United States, and shall be subject, upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, to a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or to imprisonment for a term of not more than three years, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Punishment for false entries, destroying records, refusing inspection, etc.

Penalty for not filing reports

If any persons, partnership, or corporation required by this Act to file any annual or special report shall fail so to do within the time fixed by the Commission for filing the same, and such failure shall continue for thirty days after notice of such default, the corporation shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day of the continuance of such failure, which forfeiture shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States, and shall be recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States brought in the case of a corporation or partnership in the district where the corporation or partnership has its principal office or in any district in which it shall do business, and in the case of any person in the district where such person resides or has his principal place of business. It shall be the duty of the various United States attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of forfeitures. The costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

Recovery, etc.

Punishment for unlawful divulging of information.

Any officer or employee of the Commission who shall make public any information obtained by the Commission without its authority, unless directed by a court, shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

EFFECT ON ANTITRUST ACTS AND ACT TO REGULATE COMMERCE (38 Stat. 724; 15 U.S.C. 51).

Antitrust laws and interstate commerce law not interfered with.

Sec. 11. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the enforcement of the provisions of the antitrust Acts or the Acts to regulate commerce, nor shall anything contained in the Act be construed to alter, modify, or repeal the said antitrust Acts or the Acts to regulate commerce or any part or parts thereof.

FALSE ADVERTISEMENT OF FOOD, DRUGS, DEVICES, OR COSMETICS AS UNFAIR OR DECEPTIVE ACT OR PRACTICE AND UNLAWFUL (52 Stat. 114; 88 Stat. 2193; 15 U.S.C. 52).

False advertising.

Sec. 12.[11] (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, or corporation to disseminate, or cause to be disseminated, any false advertisement—

By U.S. Mails.

(1) By United States mails, or in or having an effect upon commerce by any means, for the purpose of inducing, or which is likely to induce, directly or indirectly the purchase of food, drugs, devices, or cosmetics; or Inducing by any means the purchase in commerce of food, drugs, etc.

(2) By any means, for the purpose of inducing, or which is likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase in or having an effect upon commerce of food, drugs, devices, or cosmetics.

Dissemination of false advertisements an unfair act, etc.

(b) The dissemination or the causing to be disseminated of any false advertisement within the provisions of subsection (a) of this section shall be an unfair or deceptive act or practice in or affecting commerce within the meaning of section 5.

[11] Sections 12 through 17 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, in certain instances, are not applicable to advertisements of prescription drugs. Public Law 87-781 (Act of October 10, 1962), 76 Stat. 792.

INJUNCTION AGAINST DISSEMINATION OF FALSE ADVERTISEMENT. TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDERS, INJUNCTIONS AGAINST VIOLATIONS OF ANY PROVISION OF LAW ENFORCED BY FTC (52 Stat. 114; 87 Stat. 592; 15 U.S.C. 53).

Sec. 13. (a) Whenever the Commission has reason to believe—

(1) that any person, partnership, or corporation is engaged in, or is about to engage in, the dissemination or the causing of the dissemination of any advertisement in violation of section 12, and

(2) that the enjoining thereof pending the issuance of a complaint by the Commission under section 5, and until such complaint is dismissed by the Commission or set aside by the court on review, or the order of the Commission to cease and desist made thereon has become final within the meaning of section 5, would be to the interest of the public,

Suit or injunction.

the Commission by any of its attorneys designated by it for such purpose may bring suit in a district court of the United States or in the United States court of any Territory, to enjoin the dissemination or the causing of the dissemination of such advertisement. Upon proper showing a temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond. Any such suit shall be brought in the district in which such person, partnership, or corporation resides or transacts business.

Venue.

(b) Whenever the Commission has reason to believe—

Temporary restraining orders; injunctions.

(1) that any person, partnership, or corporation is violating, or is about to violate, any provision of law enforced by the Federal Trade Commission, and

(2) that the enjoining thereof pending the issuance of a complaint by the Commission and until such complaint is dismissed by the Commission or set aside by the court on review, or until the order of the Commission made thereon has become final, would be in the interest of the public—

the Commission by any of its attorneys designated by it for such purpose may bring suit in a district court of the United States to enjoin any such act or practice. Upon a proper showing that, weighing the equities and considering the Commission's likelihood of ultimate success, such action would be in the public interest, and after notice to the defendant, a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction may be granted without bond: Provided, however, That if a complaint is not filed within such period (not exceeding 20 days) as may be specified by the court after issuance of the temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction, the order or injunction shall be dissolved by the court and be of no further force and effect: Provided further, That in proper cases the Commission may seek, and after proper proof, the court may issue, a permanent injunction. Any such suit shall be brought in the district in which such person, partnership, or corporation resides or transacts business.

Newspapers, or other publications.

(c) Whenever it appears to the satisfaction of the court in the case of a newspaper, magazine, periodical, or other publication, published at regular intervals—

If restraining of dissemination delays delivery of issue.

(1) that restraining the dissemination of a false advertisement in any particular issue of such publication would delay the delivery of such issue after the regular time therefor, and Delay due to method by which publication usually conducted.

(2) that such delay would be due to the method by which the manufacture and distribution of such publication is customarily conducted by the publisher in accordance with sound business practice, and not to any method or device adopted for the evasion of this section or to prevent or delay the issuance of an injunction or restraining order with respect to such false advertisement or any other advertisement.

the court shall exclude such issue from the operation of the restraining order or injunction.

PENALTY—COMMODITY INJURIOUS TO HEALTH OR INTENT TO DEFRAUD (52 Stat. 114; 15 U.S.C. 54).

Commodities injurious to health.

Penalty.

Convictions for subsequent violations.

Proviso. Inspection, etc., under Meat Inspection Act.

Sec. 14. (a) Any person, partnership, or corporation who violates any provision of section 12 (a) shall, if the use of the commodity advertised may be injurious to health because of results from such use under the conditions prescribed in the advertisement thereof, or under such conditions as are customary or usual, or if such violation is with intent to defraud or mislead, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine or imprisonment; except that if the conviction is for a violation committed after a first conviction of such person, partnership, or corporation, for any violation of such section, punishment shall be by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That for the purposes of the section meats and meat food products duly inspected, marked, and labeled in accordance with rules and regulations issued under the Meat Inspection Act approved March 4, 1907, as amended, shall be conclusively presumed not injurious to health at the time the same leave official "establishments."

Liability of advertising medium.

Except on refusal to divulge address of client.

(b) No publisher, radio-broadcast licensee, or agency or medium for the dissemination of advertising, except the manufacturer, packer, disbributor, or seller of the commodity to which the false advertisement relates, shall be liable under this section by reason of the dissemination by him of any false advertisement, unless he has refused, on the request of the Commission, to furnish the Commission the name and post-office address of the manufacturer, packer, distributor, seller, or advertising agency, residing in the United States, who caused him to disseminate such advertisement. No advertising agency shall be liable under this section by reason of the causing by it of the dissemination of any false advertisement, unless it has refused, on the request of the Commission, to furnish the Commission the name and post-office address of the manufacturer, packer, distributor, or seller, residing in the United States, who caused it to cause the dissemination of such advertisement.

"FALSE ADVERTISEMENT," "FOOD," "DRUGS," "DEVICES," "COSMETIC," "OLEOMARGARINE," DEFINED (52 Stat. 114; 64 Stat. 21; 15 U.S.C. 55).

Definitions: "False advertisement."

Sec. 15. For the purposes of sections 12, 13, and 14—

(a) (1) The term "false advertisement" means an advertisement, other than labeling, which is misleading in a material respect; and in determining whether any advertisement is misleading, there shall be taken into account (among other things) not only representations made or suggested by statement, word, design, device, sound, or any combination thereof, but also the extent to which the advertisement fails to reveal facts material in the light of such representations or material with respect to consequences which may result from the use of the commodity to which the advertisement relates under the conditions prescribed in said advertisement, or under such conditions as are customary or usual. No advertisement of a drug shall be deemed to be false if it is disseminated only to members of the medical profession, contains no false representation of a material fact, and includes, or is accompanied in each instance by truthful disclosure of, the formula showing quantitatively each ingredient of such drug.

Oleomargarine as dairy product.

(2) In the case of oleomargarine or margarine an advertisement shall be deemed misleading in a material respect if in such advertisement representations are made or suggested by statement, word, grade designation, design, device, symbol, sound, or any combination thereof, that such oleomargarine or margarine is a dairy product, except that nothing contained herein shall prevent a truthful, accurate, and full statement in any such advertisement of all the ingredients contained in such oleomargarine or margerine.

"Food." (b) The term "food" means (1) articles used for food or drink for man or other animals, (2) chewing gum, and (3) articles used for components of any such article.

"Drug." (c) The term "drug" means (1) articles recognized in the official United States Pharmacopoeia, official Homeopathic Pharmacopoeia of the United States, or official National Formulary, or any supplement to any of them; and (2) articles intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals; and (3) articles (other than food) intended to affect the structure or any function of the body of man or other animals; and (4) articles intended for use as a component of any article specified in clause (1), (2), or (3); but does not include devices or their components, parts, or accessories.

"Device." (d) The term "device" (except when used in subsection (a) of this section) means instruments, apparatus, and contrivances, including their parts and accessories, intended (1) for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals; or (2) to affect the structure or any function of the body of man or other animals.

"Cosmetic." (e) The term "cosmetic" means (1) articles to be rubbed, poured, sprinkled, or sprayed on, introduced into, or otherwise applied to the human body or any part thereof intended for cleansing, beautifying, promoting attractiveness, or altering the appearance, and (2) articles intended for use as a component of any such article; except that such term shall not include soap.

"Oleomargarine." (f) For the purposes of this section and section 407 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended, the term "oleomargarine" or "margarine" includes—

(1) all substances, mixtures, and compounds known as oleomargarine or margarine;

(2) all substances, mixtures, and compounds which have a consistence similar to that of butter and which contain any edible oils or fats other than milk fat if made in imitation or semblance of butter.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION—ATTORNEY GENERAL COURT REPRESENTATION (87 Stat. 592; 88 Stat. 2199; 15 U.S.C. 56).

Sec. 16. (a) (1) Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (2) or (3), if—

Commencement, defense, intervention and supervision of litigation and appeal by Commission or Attorney General; procedure for exercise of authority to litigate or appeal.

(A) before commencing, defending, or intervening in, any civil action involving this Act (including an action to collect a civil penalty) which the Commission, or the Attorney General on behalf of the Commission, is authorized to commence, defend or intervene in, the Commission gives written notification and undertakes to consult with the Attorney General with respect to such action; and

(B) the Attorney General fails within 45 days after receipt of such notification to commence, defend, or intervene in, such action; the Commission may commence, defend, or intervene in, and supervise the litigation of, such action and any appeal of such action in its own name by any of its attorneys designated by it for such purpose.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (3), in any civil action—

(A) under section 13 of this Act (relating to injunctive relief);

(B) under section 19 of this Act (relating to consumer redress);

(C) to obtain judicial review of a rule prescribed by the Commission, or a cease and desist order issued under section 5 of this Act; or

(D) under the second paragraph of section 9 of this Act (relating to enforcement of a subpena) and under the fourth paragraph of such section (relating to compliance with section 6 of this Act);

the Commission shall have exclusive authority to commence or defend, and supervise the litigation of such action and any appeal of such action in its own name by any of its attorneys designated by it for such purpose, unless the Commission authorizes the Attorney General to do so. The Commission shall inform the Attorney General of the exercise of such authority and such exercise shall not preclude the Attorney General from intervening on behalf of the United States in such action and any appeal of such action as may be otherwise provided by law.

(3) (A) If the Commission makes a written request to the Attorney General, within the 10-day period which begins on the date of the entry of the judgment in any civil action in which the Commission represented itself pursuant to paragraph (1) or (2), to represent itself through any of its attorneys designated by it for such purpose before the Supreme Court in such action, it may do so, if—

(i) the Attorney General concurs with such request; or

(ii) the Attorney General, within the 60-day period which begins on the date of the entry of such judgment—

(a) refuses to appeal or file a petition for writ of certiorari with respect to such civil action, in which case he shall give written notification to the Commission of the reasons for such refusal within such 60-day period; or

(b) the Attorney General fails to take any action with respect to the Commission's request.

(B) In any case where the Attorney General represents the Commission before the Supreme Court in any civil action in which the Commission represented itself pursuant to paragraph (1) or (2), the Attorney General may not agree to any settlement, compromise, or dismissal of such action, or confess error in the Supreme Court with respect to such action, unless the Commission concurs.

"Attorney General."

(C) For purposes of this paragraph (with respect to representation before the Supreme Court), the term Attorney General includes the Solicitor General.

(4) If, prior to the expiration of the 45-day period specified in paragraph (1) of this section or a 60-day period specified in paragraph (3), any right of the Commission to commence, defend, or intervene in, any such action or appeal may be extinguished due to any procedural requirement of any court with respect to the time in which any pleadings, notice of appeal, or other acts pertaining to such action or appeal may be taken, the Attorney General shall have one-half of the time required to comply with any such procedural requirement of the court (including any extension of such time granted by the court) for the purpose of commencing, defending, or intervening in the civil action pursuant to paragraph (1) or for the purpose of refusing to appeal or file a petition for writ of certiorari and the written notification or failing to take any action pursuant to paragraph 3 (A) (ii).

(5) The provisions of this subsection shall apply notwithstanding chapter 31 of title 28, United States Code, or any other provision of law.

Criminal proceedings.

(b) Whenever the Commission has reason to believe that any person, partnership, or corporation is liable for a criminal penalty under this Act, the Commission shall certify the facts to the Attorney General, whose duty it shall be to cause appropriate criminal proceedings to be brought.[12]

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS (52 Stat. 114; 15 U.S.C. 57).

Separability clause.

Sec. 17. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person, partnership, corporation, or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act and the application of such provision to any other person, partnership, corporation, or circumstance, shall not be affected thereby.

RULEMAKING. HEARING PROCEDURES, STATEMENT OF BASIS AND PURPOSE. JUDICIAL REVIEW. "RULEMAKING RECORD". "EVIDENCE". BANKS. REGULATIONS PRESCRIBED BY BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM. REPORT TO CONGRESS. COMPENSATION. (88 Stat. 2193; 15 U.S.C. 57a)[13]

Authority to prescribe rules and general statements of policy respecting unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

Sec. 18. (a) (1) The Commission may prescribe—

(A) interpretive rules and general statements of policy with respect to unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce (within the meaning of section 5 (a) (1) of this Act), and

---

[12] Section 204 (c) of Public Law 93-637 provided that the amendment of section 16 and repeal of section 5(m) of the Federal Trade Commission Act did not apply to any civil action commenced before the date of enactment of the Act (January 4, 1975).

(B) rules which define with specificity acts or practices which are unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce (within the meaning of such section 5 (a) (1). Rules under this subparagraph may include requirements prescribed for the purpose of preventing such acts or practices.

(2) The Commission shall have no authority under this Act, other than its authority under this section, to prescribe any rule with respect to unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce (within the meaning of section 5 (a) (1)). The preceding sentence shall not affect any authority of the Commission to prescribe rules (including interpretive rules), and general statements of policy, with respect to unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce.

Procedures

(b) When prescribing a rule under subsection (a) (1) (B) of this section, the Commission shall proceed in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code (without regard to any reference in such section to sections 556 and 557 of such title), and shall also (1) publish a notice of proposed rulemaking stating with particularity the reason for the proposed rule; (2) allow interested persons to submit written data, views, and arguments, and make all such submissions publicly available; (3) provide an opportunity for an informal hearing in accordance with subsection (c); and (4) promulgate, if appropriate, a final rule based on the matter in the rulemaking record (as defined in subsection (e)

[13] Section 202(c) of Public Law 93-637 provides that:

"(1) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall not affect the validity of any rule which was promulgated under section 6 (g) of the Federal Trade Commission Act prior to the date of enactment of this section. Any proposed rule under section 6(g) of such Act with respect to which presentation of data, views, and arguments was substantially completed before such date may be promulgated in the same manner and with the same validity as such rule could have been promulgated had this section not been enacted.

(2) If a rule described in paragraph (1) of this subsection is valid and if section 18 of the Federal Trade Commission Act would have applied to such rule had such rule been promulgated after the date of enactment of this Act, any substantive change in the rule after it has been promulgated shall be made in accordance with such section 18."

Section 202(d) provides that: "The Federal Trade Commission and the Administrative Conference of the United States shall each conduct a study and evaluation of the rulemaking procedures under section 18 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and each shall submit a report of its study (including any legislative recommendations) to the Congress not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act."

(1) (B)), together with a statement of basis and purpose.

(c) The Commission shall conduct any informal hearings required by subsection (b) (3) of this section in accordance with the following procedure:

Hearing procedures.

(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, an interested person is entitled—

(A) to present his position orally or by documentary submissions (or both), and

(B) if the Commission determines that there are disputed issues of material fact it is necessary to resolve, to present such rebuttal submissions and to conduct (or have conducted under paragraph (2) (B)) such cross-examination of persons as the Commission determines (i) to be appropriate, and (ii) to be required for a full and true disclosure with respect to such issues.

(2) The Commission may prescribe such rules and make such rulings concerning proceedings in such hearings as may tend to avoid unnecessary costs or delay. Such rules or rulings may include (A) imposition of reasonable time limits on each interested person's oral presentations, and (B) requirements that any cross-examination to which a person may be entitled under paragraph (1) be conducted by the Commission on behalf of that person in such manner as the Commission determines (i) to be appropriate, and (ii) to be required for a full and true disclosure with respect to disputed issues of material fact.

(3) (A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), if a group of persons each of whom under paragraphs (1) and (2) would be entitled to conduct (or have conducted) cross-examination and who are determined by the Commission to have the same or similar interests in the proceeding cannot agree upon a single representative of such interests for purposes of cross-examination, the Commission may make rules and rulings (i) limiting the representation of such interest, for such purposes, and (ii) governing the manner in which such cross-examination shall be limited.

(B) When any person who is a member of a group with respect to which the Commission has made a determination under subparagraph (A) is unable to agree upon group representation with the other members of the group, then such person shall not be denied under the authority of subparagraph (A) the opportunity to conduct (or have conducted) cross-examination as to issues affecting his particular interests if (i) he satisfies the Commission that he has made a reasonable and good faith effort to reach agreement upon group representation with the other members of the group and (ii) the Commission determines that there are substantial and relevant issues which are not adequately presented by the group representative.

(4) A verbatim transcript shall be taken of any oral presentation, and cross-examination, in an informal hearing to which this subsection applies. Such transcript shall be available to the public.

Statement of basis and purpose, requirements.

(d) (1) The Commission's statement of basis and purpose to accompany a rule promulgated under subsection (a) (1) (B) shall include (A) a statement as to the prevalence of the acts or practices treated by the rule; (B) a statement as to the manner and context in which such acts or practices are unfair or deceptive; and (C) a statement as to the economic effect of the rule, taking into account the effect on small business and consumers.

"Commission."

(2) (A) The term "Commission" as used in this subsection and subsections (b) and (c) includes any person authorized to act in behalf of the Commission in any part of the rulemaking proceeding.

(B) A substantive amendment to, or repeal of, a rule promulgated under subsection (a) (1) (B) shall be prescribed, and subject to judicial review, in the same manner as a rule prescribed under such subsection. An exemption under subsection (g) shall not be treated as an amendment or repeal of a rule.

(3) When any rule under subsection (a) (1) (B) takes effect a subsequent violation thereof shall constitute an unfair or deceptive act or practice in violation of section 5 (a) (1) of this Act, unless the Commission otherwise expressly provides in such rule.

Judicial review.

(e) (1) (A) Not later than 60 days after a rule is promulgated under subsection (a) (1) (B) by the Commission, any interested person (including a consumer or consumer organization) may file a petition, in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia circuit or for the circuit in which such person resides or has his principal place of business, for judicial review of such rule. Copies of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission or other officer designated by it for that purpose. The provisions of section 2112 of title 28, United States Code, shall apply to the filing of the rulemaking record of proceedings on which the Commission based its rule and to the transfer of proceedings in the courts of appeals.

"Rulemaking record."

(B) For purposes of this section, the term "rulemaking record" means the rule, its statement of basis and purpose, the transcript required by subsection (c) (4), any written submissions, and any other information which the Commission considers relevant to such rule.

(2) If the petitioner or the Commission applies to the court for leave to make additional oral submissions or written presentations and shows to the satisfaction of the court that such submissions and presentations would be material and that there were reasonable grounds for the submissions and failure to make such submissions and presentations in the proceeding before the Commission, the court may order the Commission to provide additional opportunity to make such submissions and presentations. The Commission may modify or set aside its rule or make a new rule by reason of the additional submissions and presentations and shall file such modified or new rule, and the rule's statement of basis of purpose, with the return of such submissions and presentations. The court shall thereafter review such new or modified rule.

(3) Upon the filing of the petition under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the court shall have jurisdiction to review the rule in accordance with chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, and to grant appropriate relief, including interim relief, as provided in such chapter. The court shall hold unlawful and set aside the rule on any ground specified in subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), or (D) of section 706 (2) of title 5, United States Code (taking due account of the rule of prejudicial error), or if—

5 USC 701.

(A) the court finds that the Commission's action is not supported by substantial evidence in the rulemaking record (as defined in paragraph (1) (B) of this subsection) taken as a whole, or

(B) the court finds that—

(i) a Commission determination under subsection (c) that the petitioner is not entitled to conduct cross-examination or make rebuttal submissions, or

(ii) a Commission rule or ruling under subsection (c) limiting the petitioner's cross-examination or rebuttal submissions, has precluded disclosure of disputed material facts which was necessary for fair determination by the Commission of the rulemaking proceeding taken as a whole.

"Evidence."

The term "evidence", as used in this paragraph, means any matter in the rulemaking record.

(4) The judgment of the court affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such rule shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification, as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

(5) (A) Remedies under the preceding paragraphs of this subsection are in addition to and not in lieu of any other remedies provided by law.

(B) The United States Courts of Appeal shall have exclusive jurisdiction of any action to obtain judicial review (other than in an enforcement proceeding) of a rule prescribed under subsection (a) (1) (B), if any district court of the United States would have had jurisdiction of such action but for this subparagraph. Any such action shall be brought in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia circuit, or for any circuit which includes a judicial district in which the action could have been brought but for this subparagraph.

(C) A determination, rule, or ruling of the Commission described in paragraph (3) (B) (i) or (ii) may be reviewed only in a proceeding under this subsection and only in accordance with paragraph (3) (B). Section 706 (2) (E) of title 5, United States Code, shall not apply to any rule promulgated under subsection (a) (1) (B). The contents and adequacy of any statement required by subsection (b) (4) shall not be subject to judicial review in any respect.

Banks.

(f) (1) In order to prevent unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce (including acts or practices which are unfair or deceptive to consumers) by banks, each agency specified in paragraph (2) of this subsection shall establish a separate division of consumer affairs which shall receive and take appropriate action upon complaints with respect to such acts or practices by banks subject to its jurisdiction. The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of this section, including regulations defining with specificity such unfair or deceptive acts or practices, and containing requirements prescribed for the purpose of preventing such acts or practices. Whenever the Commission prescribes a rule under subsection (a) (1) (B) of this section, then within 60 days after such rule takes effect such Board shall promulgate substantially similar regulations prohibiting acts or practices of banks which are substantially similar to those prohibited by rules of the Commission and which impose substantially similar requirements, unless such Board finds that (A) such acts or practices of banks are not unfair or deceptive, or (B) that implementation of similar regulations with respect to banks would seriously conflict with essential monetary and payments systems policies of the Board, and publishes any such finding, and the reasons therefor, in the Federal Register.

Regulations.

Publication in Federal Register.

(2) Compliance with regulations prescribed under this subsection shall be enforced under section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, in the case of— 12 USC 1818.

(A) national banks and banks operating under the code of law for the District of Columbia, by the division of consumer affairs established by the Comptroller of the Currency;

(B) member banks of the Federal Reserve System (other than banks referred to in subparagraph (A)) by the division of consumer affairs established by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System; and

(C) banks insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (other than banks referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B)), by the division of consumer affairs established by the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

(3) For the purpose of the exercise by any agency referred to in paragraph (2) of its powers under any Act referred to in that paragraph, a violation of any regulation prescribed under this subsection shall be deemed to be a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act. In addition to its powers under any provision of law specifically referred to in paragraph (2), each of the agencies referred to in that paragraph may exercise, for the purpose of enforcing compliance with any regulation prescribed under this subsection, any other authority conferred on it by law.

(4) The authority of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to issue regulations under this subsection does not impair the authority of any other agency designated in this subsection to make rules respecting its own procedures in enforcing compliance with regulations prescribed under this subsection.

Report to Congress.

(5) Each agency exercising authority under this subsection shall transmit to the Congress not later than March 15 of each year a detailed report on its activities under this paragraph during the preceding calendar year.

(g) (1) Any person to whom a rule under subsection (a) (1) (B) of this section applies may petition the Commission for an exemption from such rule.

(2) If, on its own motion or on the basis of a petition under paragraph (1), the Commission finds that the application of a rule prescribed under subsection (a) (1) (B) to any person or class or persons is not necessary to prevent the unfair or deceptive act or practice to which the rule relates, the Commission may exempt such person or class from all or part of such rule. Section 553 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to action under this paragraph.

(3) Neither the pendency of a proceeding under this subsection respecting an exemption from a rule, nor the pendency of judicial proceedings to review the Commission's action or failure to act under this subsection, shall stay the applicability of such rule under subsection (a) (1) (B).

Compensation.

(h) (1) The Commission may, pursuant to rules prescribed by it, provide compensation for reasonable attorneys fees, expert witness fees, and other costs of participating in a rulemaking proceeding under this section to any person (A) who has, or represents, an interest (i) which would not otherwise be adequately represented in such proceeding, and (ii) representation of which is necessary for a fair determination of the rulemaking proceeding taken as a whole, and (B) who is unable effectively to participate in such proceeding because such person cannot afford to pay costs of making oral presentations, conducting cross-examination, and making rebuttal submissions in such proceeding.

(2) The aggregate amount of compensation paid under this subsection in any fiscal year to all persons who, in rulemaking proceedings in which they receive compensation, are persons who either (A) would be regulated by the proposed rule, or (B) represent persons who would be so regulated, may not exceed 25 percent of the aggregate amount paid as compensation under this subsection to all persons in such fiscal year.

(3) The aggregate amount of compensation paid to all persons in any fiscal year under this subsection may not exceed $1,000,000.

CONSUMER REDRESS. CIVIL ACTION FOR VIOLATION OF RULE, ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST. JURISDICTION OF COURT TO GRANT RELIEF. NOTICE OF ACTION. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. (88 Stat. 2201; 15 U.S.C. 57b)[14]

Violation of rule respecting unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

Sec. 19. (a) (1) If any person, partnership, or corporation violates any rule under this Act respecting unfair or deceptive acts or practices (other than an interpretive rule, or a rule violation of which the Commission has provided is not an unfair or deceptive act or practice in violation of section 5 (a)), then the Commission may commence a civil action against such person, partnership, or corporation for relief under subsection (b) in a United States district court or in any court of competent jurisdiction of a State.

Civil action for violation of order to cease and desist.

(2) If any person, partnership, or corporation engages in any unfair or deceptive act or practice (within the meaning of section 5 (a) (1)) with respect to which the Commission has issued a final cease and desist order which is applicable to such person, partnership, or corporation, then the Commission may commence a civil action against such person, partnership, or corporation in a United States district court or in any court of competent jurisdiction of a State. If the Commission satisfies the court that the act or practice to which the cease and desist order relates is one which a reasonable man would have known under the circumstances was dishonest or fraudulent, the court may grant relief under subsection (b).

[14] Section 206(b) of Public Law 93-637 provides that:

"The amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall not apply to—

(1) any violation of a rule to the extent that such violation occurred before the date of enactment of this Act, or

(2) any act or practice with respect to which the Commission issues a cease-and-desist order, to the extent that such act or practice occurred before the date of enactment of this Act, unless such order was issued after such date and the person, partnership or corporation against whom such an order was issued had been notified in the complaint, or in the notice or order attached thereto, that consumer redress may be sought."

Consumer redress.

(b) The court in an action under subsection (a) shall have jurisdiction to grant such relief as the court finds necessary to redress injury to consumers or other persons, partnerships, and corporations resulting from the rule violation or the unfair or deceptive act or practice, as the case may be. Such relief may include, but shall not be limited to, rescission or reformation of contracts, the refund of money or return of property, the payment of damages, and public notification respecting the rule violation or the unfair or deceptive act or practice, as the case may be; except that nothing in this subsection is intended to authorize the imposition of any exemplary or punitive damages.

FTC's findings conclusive.

(c) (1) If (A) a cease and desist order issued under section 5 (b) has become final under section 5 (g) with respect to any person's, partnership's, or corporation's rule violation or unfair or deceptive act or practice, and (B) an action under this section is brought with respect to such person's, partnership's, or corporation's rule violation or act or practice, then the findings of the Commission as to the material facts in the proceeding under section 5 (b) with respect to such person's, partnership's, or corporation's rule violation or act or practice, shall be conclusive unless (i) the terms of such cease and desist order expressly provide that the Commission's findings shall not be conclusive, or (ii) the order became final by reason of section 5 (g) (1), in which case such finding shall be conclusive if supported by evidence.

Notice.

(2) The court shall cause notice of an action under this section to be given in a manner which is reasonably calculated, under all of the circumstances, to apprise the persons, partnerships, and corporations allegedly injured by the defendant's rule violation or act or practice of the pendency of such action. Such notice may, in the discretion of the court, be given by publication.

Statute of limitations.

(d) No action may be brought by the Commission under this section more than 3 years after the rule violation to which an action under subsection (a) (1) relates, or the unfair or deceptive act or practice to which an action under subsection (a) (2) relates; except that if a cease and desist order with respect to any person's, partnership's, or corporation's rule violation or unfair or deceptive act or practice has become final and such order was issued in a proceeding under section 5 (b) which was commenced not later than 3 years after the rule violation or act or practice occurred, a civil action may be commenced under this section against such person, partnership, or corporation at any time before the expiration of one year after such order becomes final.

(e) Remedies provided in this section are in addition to, and not in lieu of, any other remedy or right of action provided by State or Federal law. Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect any authority of the Commission under any other provision of law.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS (88 Stat. 2203; 90 Stat. 588; 15 U.S.C. 57c).

Sec. 20. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the functions, powers, and duties of the Federal Trade Commission not to exceed $42,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975; not to exceed $47,091,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976; and not to exceed $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending in 1977.[15] For fiscal years ending after 1977, there may be appropriated to carry out such functions, powers, and duties, only such sums as the Congress may hereafter authorize by law.

CLAYTON ACT

[Public No. 212, 63D Congress, Approved October 15, 1914 (38 Stat. 730, as amended; 15 U.S.C. 12), as amended by Public No. 692 (Robinson-Patman Act), 74th Congress, approved June 19, 1936 (49 Stat. 1526) and as amended by Public No. 899 (Celler-Kefauver Antimerger Act), 81st Congress, approved December 29, 1950 (64 Stat. 1125).][1]

AN ACT To supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes.

TERMS DEFINED[2] (38 Stat. 730; 90 Stat. 1397; 15 U.S.C. 12).

Laws included in this Act.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) "antitrust laws," as used herein, includes the Act entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July second, eighteen hundred and ninety; sections seventy-three to seventy-seven, inclusive of an Act entitled "An Act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," of August twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and ninety-four; an Act entitled "An Act to amend sections seventy-three and seventy-six of the Act of August twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and ninety-four entitled 'An Act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' " approved February twelfth, nineteen hundred and thirteen; and also this Act.

[1] The Act is set forth as further amended by the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, P. Law 93-528 approved December 21, 1974, and the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976, P. Law 94-435 approved September 30, 1976.

[2] This caption and each caption that precedes each other section of the Clayton Act as set forth above are not provisions of the Act. Such captions are additions made by the editors of this compilation.

Meaning of terms. "Commerce."

Insular possessions included.

Proviso. Not applicable to Philippines.

"Commerce," as used herein, means trade or commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States and any State, Territory or foreign nation, or between any insular possessions or other places under the jurisdiction of the United States, or between any such possession or place and any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or any foreign nation, or within the District of Columbia or any Territory or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, That nothing in this Act contained shall apply to the Philippine Islands.

"Person" or "persons."

The word "person" or "persons" wherever used in this Act shall be deemed to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country.

(b) This Act may be cited as the "Clayton Act".

DISCRIMINATION IN PRICE, SERVICES, OR FACILITIES; SELECTION OF CUSTOMERS; BURDEN OF REBUTTING PRIMA FACIE CASE OF DISCRIMINATION; PAYMENT OR ACCEPTANCE OF COMMISSION, BROKERAGE OR OTHER COMPENSATION; PAYMENT FOR SERVICES OR FACILITIES FOR PROCESSING OR SALE; FURNISHING SERVICES OR FACILITIES FOR PROCESSING, HANDLING, ETC.; KNOWINGLY INDUCING OR RECEIVING DISCRIMINATORY PRICE (49 Stat. 1526; 15 U.S.C. 13).

Discrimination in price between different customers.

Sec. 2[3] (a) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered: Provided, however, That the Federal Trade Commission may, after due investigation and hearing to all interested parties, fix and establish quantity limits, and revise the same as it finds necessary, as to particular commodities or classes of commodities, where it finds that available purchasers in greater quantities are so few as to render differentials on account thereof unjustly discriminatory|or|promotive of monopoly in any line of commerce; and the foregoing shall then not be construed to permit differentials based on differences in quantities greater than those so fixed and established: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent price changes from time to time where in response to changing conditions affecting the market for or the marketability of the goods concerned, such as but not limited to actual or imminent deterioration of perishable goods, obsolescence of seasonal goods, distress sales under court process, or sales in good faith in discontinuance of business in the goods concerned.

Lessening, etc., competition.

Provisos.
Differentials.

Selection of customers.

Hearing on complaint.

Burden of proof.

Proviso. Lower price made in good faith to meet competition.

(b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.

Brokerage, etc., payments.

Payment for services rendered.

(c) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

Discriminatory payments by seller to buyer for services, etc.

(d) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by such person, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities.

Furnishing services or facilities to a buyer upon terms not accorded to all buyers.

(e) That it shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or furnishing, or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms.

Inducing or receiving discrimination in price.

(f) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section.

TYING OR EXCLUSIVE LEASES, SALES, OR CONTRACTS (38 Stat. 731; 15 U.S.C. 14).

Leases, sales, etc., binding purchaser not to use goods of competitor unlawful.

Tying contracts unlawful where competition lessened.

Sec. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

SUITS BY PERSONS INJURED (38 Stat. 731; 15 U.S.C. 15).

Recovery of treble damages for injuries by antitrust violations.

Sec. 4. That any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found, or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

SUITS BY UNITED STATES (69 Stat. 282; 15 U.S.C. 15a).

Suit by U.S. for damages.

Sec. 4A. Whenever the United States is hereafter injured in its business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws it may sue therefor in the United States district court for the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover actual damages by it sustained and the cost of suit.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS (69 Stat. 283; 90 Stat. 1396; 15 U.S.C. 15b).

Time limitation.

Sec. 4B. Any action to enforce any cause of action under section 4, 4A, or 4C shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. No cause of action barred under existing law on the effective date of this Act shall be revived by this Act.

PARENS PATRIAE ACTIONS BY STATE ATTORNEYS GENERAL; TREBLE DAMAGE AWARDS; COSTS; NOTICE; MONETARY RELIEF, EXCLUSION; FINAL JUDGMENT; DISMISSAL OR COMPROMISE OF ACTION, NOTICE; ATTORNEYS' FEES (90 Stat. 1394; 15 U.S.C. 15c).[4]

Sec. 4C. (a)(1) Any attorney general of a State may bring a civil action in the name of such State, as parens patriae on behalf of natural persons residing in such State, in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the defendant, to secure monetary relief as provided in this section for injury sustained by such natural persons to their property by reason of any violation of the Sherman Act. The court shall exclude from the amount of monetary relief awarded in such action any amount of monetary relief (A) which duplicates amounts which have been awarded for the same injury, or (B) which is properly allocable to (i) natural persons who have excluded their claims pursuant to subsection (b)(2) of this section, and (ii) any business entity.

Treble damage awards. Costs. Notice.

(2) The court shall award the State as monetary relief threefold the total damage sustained as described in paragraph (1) of this subsection, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

(b)(1) In any action brought under subsection (a)(1) of this section, the State attorney general shall, at such times, in such manner, and with such content as the court may direct, cause notice thereof to be given by publication. If the court finds that notice given solely by publication would deny due process of law to any person or persons, the court may direct further notice to such person or persons according to the circumstances of the case.

Monetary relief, exclusion.

(2) Any person on whose behalf an action is brought under subsection (a)(1) may elect to exclude from adjudication the portion of the State claim for monetary relief attributable to him by filing notice of such election with the court within such time as specified in the notice given pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection.

Final judgment.

(3) The final judgment in an action under subsection (a)(1) shall be res judicata as to any claim under section 4 of this Act by any person on behalf of whom such action was brought and who fails to give such notice within the period specified in the notice given pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection.

Dismissal or compromise of action, notice.

(c) An action under subsection (a)(1) shall not be dismissed or compromised without the approval of the court, and notice of any proposed dismissal or compromise shall be given in such manner as the court directs.

Attorneys' fees.

(d) In any action under subsection (a)—

(1) the amount of the plaintiffs' attorney's fee, if any, shall be determined by the court; and

(2) the court may, in its discretion, award a reasonable attorney's fee to a prevailing defendant upon a finding that the State attorney general has acted in bad faith, vexatiously, wantonly, or for oppressive reasons.

MEASUREMENT OF DAMAGES (90 Stat. 1395; 15 U.S.C. 15d).

Sec. 4D. In any action under section 4C(a)(1), in which there has been a determination that a defendant agreed to fix prices in violation of the Sherman Act, damages may be proved and assessed in the aggregate by statistical or sampling methods, by the computation of illegal overcharges, or by such other reasonable system of estimating aggregate damages as the court in its discretion may permit without the necessity of separately proving the individual claim of, or amount of damage to, persons on whose behalf the suit was brought.

DISTRIBUTION OF DAMAGES (90 Stat. 1395; 15 U.S.C. 15e).

Sec. 4E. Monetary relief recovered in an action under section 4C(a)(1) shall—

(1) be distributed in such manner as the district court in its discretion may authorize; or

(2) be deemed a civil penalty by the court and deposited with the State as general revenues; subject in either case to the requirement that any distribution procedure adopted afford each person a reasonable opportunity to secure his appropriate portion of the net monetary relief.

ACTIONS BY ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES; NOTIFICATION; INVESTIGATIVE FILES, AVAILABILITY (90 Stat. 1395; 15 U.S.C. 15f).

Notification.

Sec. 4F. (a) Whenever the Attorney General of the United States has brought an action under the antitrust laws, and he has reason to believe that any State attorney general would be entitled to bring an action under this Act based substantially on the same alleged violation of the antitrust laws, he shall promptly give written notification thereof to such State attorney general.

Investigative files, availability.

(b) To assist a State attorney general in evaluating the notice or in bringing any action under this Act, the Attorney General of the United States shall, upon request by such State attorney general, make available to him, to the extent permitted by law, any investigative files or other materials which are or may be relevant or material to the actual or potential cause of action under this Act.

DEFINITIONS (90 Stat. 1396; 15 U.S.C. 15g).

Sec. 4G. For the purposes of sections 4C, 4D, 4E, and 4F of this Act:

(1) The term "State attorney general" means the chief legal officer of a State, or any other person authorized by State law to bring actions under section 4C of this Act, and includes the Corporation Counsel of the District of Columbia, except that such term does not include any person employed or retained on—

(A) a contingency fee based on a percentage of the monetary relief awarded under this section; or

(B) any other contingency fee basis, unless the amount of the award of a reasonable attorney's fee to a prevailing plaintiff is determined by the court under section 4C(d)(1).

(2) The term "State" means a State, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any other territory or possession of the United States.

(3) The term "natural persons" does not include proprietorships or partnerships.

APPLICABILITY OF PARENS PATRIAE ACTIONS (90 Stat. 1396; 15 U.S.C. 14h).

Sec. 4H. Sections 4C, 4D, 4E, 4F, and 4G shall apply in any State, unless such State provides by law for its nonapplicability in such State.

JUDGMENTS: PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE; CONSENT JUDGMENTS AND COMPETITIVE IMPACT STATEMENTS; PUBLICATION IN FEDERAL REGISTER; AVAILABILITY OF COPIES TO THE PUBLIC; PUBLICATION OF SUMMARIES IN NEWSPAPERS; CONSIDERATION OF PUBLIC COMMENTS BY ATTORNEY GENERAL AND PUBLICATION OF RESPONSE; PUBLIC INTEREST DETERMINATION; PROCEDURE FOR PUBLIC INTEREST DETERMINATION; FILING OF WRITTEN OR ORAL COMMUNICATIONS WITH THE DISTRICT COURT; INADMISSIBILITY AS EVIDENCE OF PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE DISTRICT COURT AND THE COMPETITIVE IMPACT STATEMENT;SUSPENSION OF LIMITATIONS (38 Stat. 731; 69 Stat. 283; 88 Stat. 1706; 90 Stat. 1396; 15 U.S.C. 16).

Final judgments or decrees.

Sec. 5. (a) A final judgment or decree heretofore or hereafter rendered in any civil or criminal proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws to the effect that a defendant has violated said laws shall be prima facie evidence against such defendant in any action or proceeding brought by any other party against such defendant under said laws or by the United States under section 4A, as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto: Provided, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken or to judgments or decrees entered in actions under section 4A.

Consent judgments excepted.

(b) Any proposal for a consent judgment submitted by the United States for entry in any civil proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws shall be filed with the district court before which such proceeding is pending and published by the United states in the Federal Register at least 60 days prior to the effective date of such judgment. Any written comments relating to such proposal and any responses by the United States thereto, shall also be filed with such district court and published by the United States in the Federal Register within such sixty-day period. Copies of such proposal and any other materials and documents, which the United States considered determinative in formulating such proposal, shall also be made available to the public at the district court and in such other districts as the court may subsequently direct. Simultaneously with the filing of such proposal, unless otherwise instructed by the court, the United States shall file with the district court, publish in the Federal Register, and thereafter furnish to any person upon request, a competitive impact statement which shall recite—

Publication in Federal Register.

Competitive impact statement, publication in Federal Register.

(1) the nature and purpose of the proceeding;

(2) a description of the practices or events giving rise to the alleged violation of the antitrust laws;

(3) an explanation of the proposal for a consent judgment, including an explanation of any unusual circumstances giving rise to such proposal or any provision contained therein, relief to be obtained thereby, and the anticipated effects on competition of such relief;

(4) the remedies available to potential private plaintiffs damaged by the alleged violation in the event that such proposal for the consent judgment is entered in such proceeding;

(5) a description of the procedures available for modification of such proposal; and

(6) a description and evaluation of alternatives to such proposal actually considered by the United States.

Publication in newspapers.

(c) The United States shall also cause to be published, commencing at least 60 days prior to the effective date of the judgment described in subsection (b) of this section, for 7 days over a period of 2 weeks in newspapers of general circulation of the district in which the case has been filed, in the District of Columbia, and in such other districts as the court may direct—

(i) a summary of the terms of the proposal for the consent judgement,

(ii) a summary of the competitive impact statement filed under subsection (b),

(iii) and a list of the materials and documents under subsection (b) which the United States shall make available for purposes of meaningful public comment, and the place where such materials and documents are available for public inspection.

Comments.

(d) During the 60-day period as specified in subsection (b) of this section, and such additional time as the United States may request and the court may grant, the United States shall receive and consider any written comments relating to the proposal for the consent judgment submitted under subsection (b). The Attorney General or his designee shall establish procedures to carry out the provisions of this subsection, but such 60-day time period shall not be shortened except by order of the district court upon a showing that (1) extraordinary circumstances require such shortening and (2) such shortening is not adverse to the public interest. At the close of the period during which such comments may be received, the United States shall file with the district court and cause to be published in the Federal Register a response to such comments.

Response, publication in Federal Register.

Public interest determination.

(e) Before entering any consent judgment proposed by the United States under this section, the court shall determine that the entry of such judgment is in the public interest. For the purpose of such determination, the court may consider—

(1) the competitive impact of such judgment, including termination of alleged violations, provisions for enforcement and modification, duration or relief sought, anticipated effects of alternative remedies actually considered, and any other considerations bearing upon the adequacy of such judgment;

(2) the impact of entry of such judgment upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint including consideration of public benefit, if any, to be derived from a determination of issues at trial.

(f) In making its determination under subsection (e), the court may—

(1) take testimony of Government officials or experts or such other expert witnesses, upon motion of any party or participant or upon its own motion, as the court may deem appropriate;

(2) appoint a special master and such outside consultants or expert witnesses as the court may deem appropriate; and request and obtain the views, evaluations, or advice of any individual, group or agency of government with respect to any aspects of the proposed judgment or the effect of such judgment, in such manner as the court deems appropriate;

(3) authorize full or limited participation in proceedings before the court by interested persons or agencies, including appearance amicus curiae, intervention as a party pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, examination of witnesses or documentary materials, or participation in any other manner and extent which serves the public interest as the court may deem appropriate;

(4) review any comments including any objections filed with the United States under subsection (d) concerning the proposed judgment and the responses of the United States to such comments and objections; and

(5) take such other action in the public interest as the court may deem appropriate.

Filing of written or oral communications.

(g) Not later than 10 days following the date of the filing of any proposal for a consent judgment under subsection (b), each defendant shall file with the district court a description of any and all written or oral communications by or on behalf of such defendant, including any and all written or oral communications on behalf of such defendant, or other person, with any officer or employee of the United States concerning or relevant to such proposal, except that any such communications made by counsel of record alone with the Attorney General or the employees of the Department of Justice alone shall be excluded from the requirements of this subsection. Prior to the entry of any consent judgment pursuant to the antitrust laws, each defendant shall certify to the district court that the requirements of this subsection have been complied with and that such filing is a true and complete description of such communications known to the defendant or which the defendant reasonably should have known.

(h) Proceedings before the district court under subsections (e) and (f) of this section, and the competitive impact statement filed under subsection (b) of this section, shall not be admissible against any defendant in any action or proceeding brought by any other party against such defendant under the antitrust laws or by the United States under section 4A of this Act nor constitute a basis for the introduction of the consent judgement as prima facie evidence against such defendant in any such action or proceeding.

Suspension of statute of limitations.

(i) Whenever any civil or criminal proceeding is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish violations of any of the antitrust laws, but not including an action under section 4A, the running of the statute of limitations in respect of every private or State right of action arising under said laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in said proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter: Provided, however, That whenever the running of the statute of limitations in respect of a cause of action arising under section 4 or 4C is suspended hereunder, any action to enforce such cause of action shall be forever barred unless commenced either within the period of suspension or within four years after the cause of action accrued.

PROVISION RELATING TO LABOR, AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL ORGANIZATIONS (38 Stat. 731; 15 U.S.C. 17).

Labor not a commodity, etc.

Labor, etc., organizations not forbidden.

Sec. 6. That the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce. Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, instituted for the purposes of mutual help, and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the antitrust laws.

ACQUISITION BY CORPORATION OF STOCK OR ASSETS OF ANOTHER CORPORATION (38 Stat. 731; 15 U.S.C. 18).

Restrictions on acquisition of certain stock, assets, etc.

Sec. 7.[5] That no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

No corporation shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of one or more corporations engaged in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition, of such stocks or assets, or of the use of such stock by the voting or granting of proxies or otherwise, may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

Exceptions.

This section shall not apply to corporations purchasing such stock solely for investment and not using the same by voting or otherwise to bring about, or in attempting to bring about, the substantial lessening of competition. Nor shall anything contained in this section prevent a corporation engaged in commerce from causing the formation of subsidiary corporations for the actual carrying on of their immediate lawful business, or the natural and legitimate branches or extensions thereof, or from owning and holding all or a part of the stock of such subsidiary corporations, when the effect of such formation is not to substantially lessen competition.

[5] Public No. 899 (Cellar-Kefauver Antimerger Act), 81st Congress, approved December 29, 1950, amended Section 7 to read as set forth above (64 Stat. 1125).

Nor shall anything herein contained be construed to prohibit any common carrier subject to the laws to regulate commerce from aiding in the construction of branches or short lines so located as to become feeders to the main line of the company so aiding in such construction or from acquiring or owning all or any part of the stock of such branch lines, nor to prevent any such common carrier from acquiring and owning all or any part of the stock of a branch or short line constructed by an independent company where there is no substantial competition between the company owning the branch line so constructed and the company owning the main line acquiring the property or an interest therein, nor to prevent such common carrier from extending any of its lines through the medium of the acquisition of stock or otherwise of any other common carrier where there is no substantial competition between the company extending its lines and the company whose stock, property, or an interest therein is so acquired.

Nothing contained in this section shall be held to affect or impair any right heretofore legally acquired: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be held or construed to authorize or make lawful anything heretofore prohibited or made illegal by the antitrust laws, nor to exempt any person from the penal provisions thereof or the civil remedies therein provided.

Nothing contained in this section shall apply to transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by the Civil Aeronautics Board, Federal Communications Commission, Federal Power Commission, Interstate Commerce Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission in the exercise of its jurisdiction under section 10 of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, the United States Maritime Commission, or the Secretary of Agriculture under any statutory provision vesting such power in such Commission, Secretary, or Board. Exceptions.

[6] Section 202 of Public Law 94-435 provides that: "The amendment made by section 201 of this Act shall take effect 150 days after the date of enactment of this Act, except that subsection (d) of section 7A of the Clayton Act (as added by section 201 of this Act) shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(3) as a result of such acquisition, the acquiring person would hold—

(A) 15 per centum or more of the voting securities or assets of the acquired person, or

(B) an aggregate total amount of the voting securities and assets of the acquired person in excess of $15,000,000.

In the case of a tender offer, the person whose voting securities are sought to be acquired by a person required to file notification under this subsection shall file notification pursuant to rules under subsection (d).

Waiting period.

(b) (1) The waiting period required under subsection (a) shall—

(A) begin on the date of the receipt by the Federal Trade Commission and the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice (hereinafter referred to in this section as the "Assistant Attorney General") of—

(i) the completed notification required under subsection (a), or

(ii) if such notification is not completed, the notification to the extent completed and a statement of the reasons for such noncompliance, from both persons, or, in the case of a tender offer, the acquiring person; and

(B) end on the thirtieth day after the date of such receipt (or in the case of a cash tender offer, the fifteenth day), or on such later date as may be set under subsection (e) (2) or (g) (2).

Wating period, termination.

(2) The Federal Trade Commission and the Assistant Attorney General may, in individual cases, terminate the waiting period specified in paragraph (1) and allow any person to proceed with any acquisition subject to this section, and promptly shall cause to be published in the Federal Register a notice that neither intends to take any action within such period with respect to such acquisition.

Notice, publication in Federal Register.

(3) As used in this section—

"Voting securities."

(A) The term "voting securities" means any securities which at present or upon conversion entitle the owner or holder thereof to vote for the election of directors of the issuer or, with respect to unincorporated issuers, persons exercising similar functions.

(B) The amount or percentage of voting securities or assets of a person which are acquired or held by another person shall be determined by aggregating the amount or percentage of such voting securities or assets held or acquired by such other person and each affiliate thereof.

Exempt transactions.

(c) The following classes of transactions are exempt from the requirements of this section—

(1) acquisitions of goods or realty transferred in the ordinary course of business;

(2) acquisitions of bonds, mortgages, deeds of trust, or other obligations which are not voting securities;

(3) acquisitions of voting securities of an issuer at least 50 per centum of the voting securities of which are owned by the acquiring person prior to such acquisition;

(4) transfers to or from a Federal agency or a State or political subdivision thereof;

(5) transactions specifically exempted from the antitrust laws by Federal statute;

(6) transactions specifically exempted from the antitrust laws by Federal statute if approved by a Federal agency, if copies of all information and documentary material filed with such agency are contemporaneously filed with the Federal Trade Commission and the Assistant Attorney General;

(7) transactions which require agency approval under section 18(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828 (c)), or section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1842);

(8) transactions which require agency approval under section 4 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843), section 403 or 408 (e) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1726 and 1730a), or section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464), if copies of all information and documentary material filed with any such agency are contemporaneously filed with the Federal Trade Commission and the Assistant Attorney General at least 30 days prior to consummation of the proposed transaction;

(9) acquisitions, solely for the purpose of investment, of voting securities, if, as a result of such acquisition, the securities acquired or held do not exceed 10 per centum of the outstanding voting securities of the issuer;

(10) acquisitions of voting securities, if, as a result of such acquisition, the voting securities acquired do not increase, directly or indirectly, the acquiring person's per centum share of outstanding voting securities of the issuer;

(11) acquisitions, solely for the purpose of investment, by any bank, banking association, trust company, investment company, or insurance company, of (A) voting securities pursuant to a plan of reorganization or dissolution; or (B) assets in the ordinary course of its business; and

(12) such other acquisitions, transfers, or transactions, as may be exempted under subsection (d) (2) (B).

Rules.

(d) The Federal Trade Commission, with the concurrence of the Assistant Attorney General and by rule in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, consistent with the purposes of this section—

(1) shall require that the notification required under subsection (a) be in such form and contain such documentary material and information relevant to a proposed acquisition as is necessary and appropriate to enable the Federal Trade Commission and the Assistant Attorney General to determine whether such acquisition may, if consummated, violate the antitrust laws; and

(2) may—

(A) define the terms used in this section;

(B) exempt, from the requirements of this section, classes of persons, acquisitions, transfers, or transactions which are not likely to violate the antitrust laws; and

(C) prescribe such other rules as may be necessary and appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.

Acquisitions, additional information.

(e) (1) The Federal Trade Commission or the Assistant Attorney General may, prior to the expiration of the 30-day waiting period (or in the case of a cash tender offer, the 15-day waiting period) specified in subsection (b) (1) of this section, require the submission of additional information or documentary material relevant to the proposed acquisition, from a person required to file notification with respect to such acquisition under subsection (a) of this section prior to the expiration of the waiting period specified in subsection (b) (1) of this section, or from any officer, director, partner, agent, or employee of such person.

Waiting period, extension.

(2) The Federal Trade Commission or the Assistant Attorney General, in its or his discretion, may extend the 30-day waiting period (or in the case of a cash tender offer, the 15-day waiting period) specified in subsection (b) (1) of this section for an additional period of not more than 20 days (or in the case of a cash tender offer, 10 days) after the date on which the Federal Trade Commission or the Assistant Attorney General, as the case may be, receives from any person to whom a request is made under paragraph (1), or in the case of tender offers, the acquiring person, (A) all the information and documentary material required to be submitted pursuant to such a request, or (B) if such request is not fully complied with, the information and documentary material submitted and a statement of the reasons for such noncompliance. Such additional period may be further extended only by the United States district court, upon an application by the Federal Trade Commission or the Assistant Attorney General pursuant to subsection (g) (2).

(f) If a proceeding is instituted or an action is filed by the Federal Trade Commission, alleging that a proposed acquisition violates section 7 of this Act or section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, or an action is filed by the United States, alleging that a proposed acquisition violates such section 7 or section 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act, and the Federal Trade Commission or the Assistant Attorney General (1) files a motion for a preliminary injunction against consummation of such acquisition pendente lite, and (2) certifies to the United States district court for the judicial district within which the respondent resides or carries on business, or in which the action is brought, that it or he believes that the public interest requires relief pendente lite pursuant to this subsection—

(A) upon the filing of such motion and certification, the chief judge of such district court shall immediately notify the chief judge of the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such district court is located, who shall designate a United States district judge to whom such action shall be assigned for all purposes; and

(B) the motion for a preliminary injunction shall be set down for hearing by the district judge so designated at the earliest practicable time, shall take precedence over all matters except older matters of the same character and trials pursuant to section 3161 of title 18, United States Code, and shall be in every way expedited.

Civil penalty.

(g) (1) Any person, or any officer, director, or partner thereof, who fails to comply with any provision of this section shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 for each day during which such person is in violation of this section. Such penalty may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States.

Recovery.

Compliance.

(2) If any person, or any officer, director, partner, agent, or employee thereof, fails substantially to comply with the notification requirement under subsection (a) or any request for the submission of additional information or documentary material under subsection (e) (1) of this section within the waiting period specified in subsection (b) (1) and as may be extended under subsection (e) (2), the United States district court—

(A) may order compliance;

(B) shall extend the waiting period specified in subsection (b) (1) and as may have been extended under subsection (e) (2) until there has been substantial compliance, except that, in the case of a tender offer, the court may not extend such waiting period on the basis of a failure, by the person whose stock is sought to be acquired, to comply substantially with such notification requirement or any such request; and

(C) may grant such other equitable relief as the court in its discretion determines necessary or appropriate, upon application of the Federal Trade Commission or the Assistant Attorney General.

Disclosure exemption.

(h) Any information or documentary material filed with the Assistant Attorney General or the Federal Trade Commission pursuant to this section shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, and no such information or documentary material may be made public, except as may be relevant to any administrative or judicial action or proceeding. Nothing in this section is intended to prevent disclosure to either body of Congress or to any duly authorized committee or subcommittee of the Congress.

(i) (1) Any action taken by the Federal Trade Commission or the Assistant Attorney General or any failure of the Federal Trade Commission or the Assistant Attorney General to take any action under this section shall not bar any proceeding or any action with respect to such acquisition at any time under any other section of this Act or any other provision of law.

(2) Nothing contained in this section shall limit the authority of the Assistant Attorney General or the Federal Trade Commission to secure at any time from any person documentary material, oral testimony, or other information under the Antitrust Civil Process Act, the Federal Trade Commission Act, or any other provision of law.

Report to Congress.

(j) Beginning not later than January 1, 1978, the Federal Trade Commission, with the concurrence of the Assistant Attorney General, shall annually report to the Congress on the operation of this section. Such report shall include an assessment of the effects of this section, of the effects, purpose, and need for any rules promulgated pursuant thereto, and any recommendations for revisions of this section.

Legislative recommendations.

Governors of the Federal Reserve System pursuant to section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act.

(4) A bank, banking association, savings bank, or trust company, more than 50 per centum of the common stock of which is owned directly or indirectly by persons who own directly or indirectly more than 50 per centum of the common stock of such member bank.

(5) A bank, banking association, savings bank, or trust company not located and having no branch in the same city, town, or village as that in which such member bank or any branch thereof is located, or in any city, town, or village contiguous or adjacent thereto.

(6) A bank, banking association, savings bank, or trust company not engaged in a class or classes of business in which such member bank is engaged.

(7) A mutual savings bank having no capital stock.

Until February 1, 1939, nothing in this section shall prohibit any director, officer, or employee of any member bank of the Federal Reserve System, or any branch thereof, who is lawfully serving at the same time as a private banker or as a director, officer, or employee of any other bank, banking association, savings bank, or trust company, or any branch thereof, on the date of enactment of the Banking Act of 1935, from continuing such service.

Enforcement provision.

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System is authorized and directed to enforce compliance with this section, and to prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems necessary for that purpose.

Restriction on service as director in two or more competing corporations.

Not applicable to banks or carriers.

That from and after two years from the date of the approval of this Act no person at the same time shall be a director in any two or more corporations, any one of which has capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating more than $1,000,000, engaged in whole or in part in commerce, other than banks, banking associations, trust companies, and common carriers subject to the Act to regulate commerce, approved February fourth, eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, if such corporations are or shall have been theretofore, by virtue of their business and location of operation, competitors, so that the elimination of competition by agreement between them would constitute a violation of any of the provisions of any of the antitrust laws. The eligibility of a director under the foregoing provision shall be determined by the aggregate amount of the capital, surplus, and undivided profits, exclusive of dividends declared but not paid to stockholders, at the end of the fiscal year of said corporation next preceding the election of directors, and when a director has been elected in accordance with the provisions of this Act it shall be lawful for him to continue as such for one year thereafter.

Determination of eligibility.

Temporary continuance.

When any person elected or chosen as a director or officer or selected as an employee of any bank or other corporation subject to the provisions of this Act is eligible at the time of his election or selection to act for such bank or other corporation in such capacity his eligibility to act in such capacity shall not be affected and he shall not become or be deemed amenable to any of the provisions hereof by reason of any change in the affairs of such bank or other corporation from whatsoever cause, whether specifically excepted by any of the provisions hereof or not, until the expiration of one year from the date of his election or employment.

Service allowed one year after eligibility ceases.

EMBEZZLEMENT BY OFFICERS OF CARRIERS (38 Stat. 733; 18 U.S.C. 412).

[Sec. 9.[8] Repealed.]

PURCHASES AND CONTRACTS BY COMMON CARRIERS IN CASE OF INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES (38 Stat. 734; 15 U.S.C. 20).

Sec. 10. That after two years from the approval of this Act no common carrier engaged in commerce

Common carriers prohibited from dealing with another corporation if interlocking directors, etc.

[8] Sec. 9 was repealed by Public Law 772, an act to revise, codify, and enact into positive law, Title 18 of the United States Code (Crimes and Criminal Procedure), 80th Congress, approved June 25, 1948. (62 Stat. 730).

shall have any dealings in securities, supplies, or other articles of commerce, or shall make or have any contracts for construction or maintenance of any kind, to the amount of more than $50,000, in the aggregate, in any one year, with another corporation, firm, partnership, or association when the said common carrier shall have upon its board of directors or as its president, manager, or as its purchasing or selling officer, or agent in the particular transaction, any person who is at the same time a director, manager, or purchasing or selling officer of, or who has any substantial interest in, such other corporation, firm, partnership, or association, unless and except such purchases shall be made from, or such dealings shall be with, the bidder whose bid is the most favorable to such common carrier, to be ascertained by competitive bidding under regulations to be prescribed by rule or otherwise by the Interstate Commerce Commission. No bid shall be received unless the name and address of the bidder or the names and addresses of the officers, directors, and general managers thereof, if the bidder be a corporation, or of the members, if it be a partnership or firm, be given with the bid.

Lowest competitive bidders excepted.

Details of bid required.

Preventing free competition of bids punishable.

Any person who shall, directly or indirectly, do or attempt to do anything to prevent anyone from bidding or shall do any act to prevent free and fair competition among the bidders or those desiring to bid shall be punished as prescribed in this section in the case of an officer or director.

Full statement of bids to be filed with I.C.C.

Actions if violations occur.

Every such common carrier having any such transactions or making any such purchases shall within thirty days after making the same file with the Interstate Commerce Commission a full and detailed statement of the transaction showing the manner of the competitive bidding, who were the bidders, and the names and addresses of the directors and officers of the corporations and the members of the firm or partnership bidding; and whenever the said commission shall, after investigation or hearing, have reason to believe that the law has been violated in and about the said purchases or transactions it shall transmit all papers and documents and its own views or findings regarding the transaction to the Attorney General.

Penalty for violation.

If any common carrier shall violate this section it shall be fined not exceeding $25,000; and every such director, agent, manager or officer thereof who shall have knowingly voted for or directed the act constituting such violation or who shall have aided or abetted in such violation shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not exceeding $5,000, or confined in jail not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

ENFORCEMENT OF ACT (38 Stat. 734; 64 Stat. 1125; 72 Stat. 943; 73 Stat. 243; 15 U.S.C. 21).

[10] The Federal Reserve Board is now called the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System by authority of the Banking Act of 1935, Public Law 305, 74th Congress, approved August 23, 1935 (49 Stat. 704).

Notice of hearing.

charges in that respect, and containing a notice of a hearing upon a day and at a place therein fixed at least thirty days after the service of said complaint. The person so complained of shall have the right to appear at the place and time so fixed and show cause why an order should not be entered by the Commission or Board requiring such person to cease and desist from the violation of the law so charged in said complaint. The Attorney General shall have the right to intervene and appear in said proceeding and any person may make application, and upon good cause shown may be allowed by the Commission or Board, to intervene and appear in said proceeding by counsel or in person. The testimony in any such proceeding shall be reduced to writing and filed in the office of the Commission or Board. If upon such hearing the Commission or Board, as the case may be, shall be of the opinion that any of the provisions of said sections have been or are being violated, it shall make a report in writing, in which it shall state its findings as to the facts, and shall issue and cause to be served on such person an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such violations, and divest itself of the stock, or other share capital, or assets, held or rid itself of the directors chosen contrary to the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of this Act, if any there be, in the manner and within the time fixed by said order. Until the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for review, if no such petition has been duly filed within such time, or, if a petition for review has been filed within such time then until the record in the proceeding has been filed in a court of appeals of the United States, as hereinafter provided, the Commission or Board may at any time, upon such notice and in such manner as it shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any report or any order made or issued by it under this section. After the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for review, if no such petition has been duly filed within such time, or, if a petition for review has been filed within such time then until the record in the proceeding has been filed in a court of appeals of the United States, as hereinafter provided, the Commission or Board may at any time, upon such notice and in such manner as it shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any report or any order made or issued by it under this section. After the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for review, if no such petition has been duly filed within such time, the Commission or Board may at any time, after notice and opportunity for hearing, reopen and alter, modify, or set aside, in whole or in part, any report or order made or issued by it under this section, whenever in the opinion of the Commission or Board conditions of fact or of law have so changed as to require such action or if the public interest shall so require: Provided, however, That the said person may, within sixty days after service upon him or it of said report or order entered after such a reopening, obtain a review thereof in the appropriate court of appeals of the United States, in the manner provided in subsection (c) of this section.

Court review of order.

(c) Any person required by such order of the Commission or Board to cease and desist from any such violation may obtain a review of such order in the court of appeals of the United States for any circuit within which such violation occurred or within which such person resides or carries on business, by filing in the court, within sixty days after the date of the service of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission or Board be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission or Board, and thereupon the Commission or Board shall file in the court the record in the proceeding, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon such filing of the petition the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein concurrently with the Commission or Board until the filing of the record, and shall have power to make and enter a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the Commission or Board, and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed, and to issue such writs as are ancillary to its jurisdiction or are necessary in its judgment to prevent injury to the public or to competitors pendente lite. The findings of the Commission or Board as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. To the extent that the order of the Commission or Board is affirmed, the court shall issue its own order commanding obedience to the terms of such order of the Commission or Board. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Commission or Board, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission or Board, and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission or Board may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order, with the return of such additional evidence. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari, as provided in section 1254 of title 28 of the United States Code.

Supreme Court review.

Filing of record.

(d) Upon the filing of the record with it the jurisdiction of the court of appeals to affirm, enforce, modify, or set aside orders of the Commission or Board shall be exclusive.

(e) Such proceedings in the court of appeals shall be given precedence over other cases pending therein, and shall be in every way expedited. No order of the Commission or Board or judgment of the court to enforce the same shall in anywise relieve or absolve any person from any liability under the antitrust laws.

Service of complaint, order, etc.

(f) Complaints, orders, and other processes of the commission or board under this section may be served by anyone duly authorized by the commission or board, either (1) by delivering a copy thereof to the person to be served, or to a member of the partnership to be served, or to the president, secretary, or other executive officer or a director of the corporation to be served; or (2) by leaving a copy thereof at the residence or the principal office or place of business of such person; or (3) by mailing by registered or certified mail a copy thereof addressed to such person at his or its residence or principal office or place of business. The verified return by the person so serving said complaint, order, or other process setting forth the manner of said service shall be proof of the same, and the return post office receipt for said complaint, order, or other process mailed by registered or certified mail as aforesaid shall be proof of the service of the same.

Finality of orders.

(g) Any order issued under subsection (b) shall become final—

(1) upon the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for review, if no such petition has been duly filed within such time; but the Commission or Board may thereafter modify or set aside its order to the extent provided in the last sentence of subsection (b); or

(2) upon the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for certiorari, if the order of the Commission or Board has been affirmed, or the petition for review has been dismissed by the court of appeals, and no petition for certiorari has been duly filed; or

(3) upon the denial of a petition for certiorari, if the order of the Commission or Board has been affirmed or the petition for review has been dismissed by the court of appeals; or

(4) upon the expiration of thirty days from the date of issuance of the mandate of the Supreme Court, if such Court directs that the order of the Commission or Board be affirmed or the petition for review be dismissed.

Modification.

(h) If the Supreme Court directs that the order of the Commission or Board be modified or set aside, the order of the Commission or Board rendered in accordance with the mandate of the Supreme Court shall become final upon the expiration of thirty days from the time it was rendered, unless within such thirty days either party has instituted proceedings to have such order corrected to accord with the mandate, in which event the order of the Commission or Board shall become final when so corrected.

Appeals.

(i) If the order of the Commission or Board is modified or set aside by the court of appeals, and if (1) the time allowed for filing a petition for certiorari has expired and no such petition has been duly filed, or (2) the petition for certiorari has been denied, or (3) the decision of the court has been affirmed by the Supreme Court, then the order of the Commission or Board rendered in accordance with the mandate of the court of appeals shall become final on the expiration of thirty days from the time such order of the Commission or Board was rendered, unless within such thirty days either party has instituted proceedings to have such order corrected so that it will accord with the mandate, in which event the order of the Commission or Board shall become final when so corrected.

Rehearing.

(j) If the Supreme Court orders a rehearing; or if the case is remanded by the court of appeals to the Commission or Board for a rehearing, and if (1) the time allowed for filing a petition for certiorari has expired, and no such petition has been duly filed, or (2) the petition for certiorari has been denied, or (3) the decision of the court has been affirmed by the Supreme Court, then the order of the Commission or Board rendered upon such rehearing shall become final in the same manner as though no prior order of the Commission or Board has been rendered.

"Mandate."

(k) As used in this section the term "mandate", in case a mandate has been recalled prior to the expiration of thirty days from the date of issuance thereof, means the final mandate.

Penalty.

(l) Any person who violates any order issued by the Commission or Board under subsection (b) after such order has become final, and while such order is in effect, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $5,000 for each violation, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States. Each separate violation of any such order shall be a separate offense, except that in the case of a violation through continuing failure or neglect to obey a final order of the Commission or Board each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense.

DISTRICT IN WHICH TO SUE CORPORATION (38 Stat. 736; 15 U.S.C. 22).

Venue of actions against corporations.

Sec. 12. That any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found.

SUITS BY UNITED STATES; SUBPOENAS FOR WITNESSES (38 Stat. 736; 15 U.S.C. 23).

Subpoenas to run in any district.

Proviso. Witnesses in civil suits.

Sec. 13. That in any suit, action, or proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States subpoenas for witnesses who are required to attend a court of the United States in any judicial district in any case, civil or criminal, arising under the antitrust laws may run into any other district: Provided, That in civil cases no writ of subpoena shall issue for witnesses living out of the district in which the court is held at a greater distance than one hundred miles from the place of holding the same without the permission of the trial court being first had upon proper application and cause shown.

LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS AND AGENTS OF CORPORATIONS (38 Stat. 736; 15 U.S.C. 24).

Personal liability of officers of corporations for violations.

Punishment.

Sec. 14. That whenever a corporation shall violate any of the penal provisions of the antitrust laws, such violation shall be deemed to be also that of the individual directors, officers, or agents of such corporation who shall have authorized, ordered, or done any of the acts constituting in whole or in part such violation, and such violation shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and upon conviction therefor of any such director, officer, or agent he shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

RESTRAINING VIOLATIONS; PROCEDURES (38 Stat. 736; 15 U.S.C. 25).

Jurisdiction of district courts to prevent violation of this Act.

Petition for injunction.

Temporary restraining order.

Sec. 15. That the several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this Act, and it shall be the duty of the several United States attorneys[11] in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition, the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition, and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises. Whenever it shall appear to the court before which any such proceeding may be pending that the ends of justice require that other parties should be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be summoned whether they reside in the district in which the court is held or not, and subpoenas to that end may be served in any district by the marshal thereof.

[PUBLIC NO. 692, 74TH CONGRESS, APPROVED JUNE 19, 1936
(49 STAT. 1526).]

AN ACT To amend section 2 of the Act entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U.S.C., title 15, sec. 13), and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2 of the Act entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U.S.C., title 15, sec. 13), is amended to read as follows:

Act of Oct. 15, 1914, amendment.

DISCRIMINATION IN PRICE, SERVICE, OR FACILITIES [1] (49 Stat. 1526; 15 U.S.C. 13).

Discrimination in price between different purchasers.

SEC. 2. (a) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered: Provided, however, That the Federal Trade Commission may, after due investigation and hearing to all interested parties, fix and establish quantity limits, and revise the same as it finds necessary, as to particular commodities or classes of commodities, where it finds that available purchasers in greater quantities are so few as to render differentials on account thereof unjustly discriminatory or promotive of monopoly in any line of commerce; and the foregoing shall then not be construed to permit differentials based on differences in quantities greater than those so fixed and established: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent price changes from time to time where in response to changing conditions affecting the market for or the marketability of the goods concerned, such as but not limited to actual or imminent deterioration of perishable goods, obsolescence of seasonal goods, distress sales under court process, or sales in good faith in discontinuance of business in the goods concerned.

Hearing on complaint.

Burden of proof.

Proviso. Lower price made in good faith to meet competition.

(b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.

Brokerage etc., payments.

Payment for services rendered.

(c) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

Discriminatory payments by seller to buyer for services.

(d) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by such person, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities.

Furnishing services or facilities by seller to a buyer on terms not accorded to all buyers.

(e) That it shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or furnishing, or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms.

Inducing or receiving discrimination in price.

(f) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section.

Thereupon the same proceedings shall be had upon such supplementary complaint as provided in section 11 of said Act of October 15, 1914. If upon such hearing the Commission shall be of the opinion that any act, practice, or method charged in said supplementary complaint has been committed, used, or carried on since the effective date of this amendatory Act, or is being committed, used or carried on, in violation of said section 2 as amended by this Act, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts and shall issue and serve upon such person its order modifying or amending its original order to include any additional violations of law so found. Thereafter the provisions of section 11 of said Act of October 15, 1914, as to review and enforcement of orders of the Commission shall in all things apply to such modified or amended order. If upon review as provided in said section 11 the court shall set aside such modified or amended order, the original order shall not be affected thereby, but it shall be and remain in force and effect as fully and to the same extent as if such supplementary proceedings had not been taken.

NATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY ACT OF 1969

[Public Law 91-190, 91st Congress, S. 1075, Approved January 1, 1970 (83 Stat. 852)][1]

AN ACT To establish a national policy for the environment, to provide for the establishment of a Council on Environmental Quality, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "National Environmental Policy Act of 1969".

PURPOSE (83 Stat. 852).

Sec. 2. The purposes of this Act are: To declare a national policy which will encourage productive and enjoyable harmony between man and his environment; to promote efforts which will prevent or eliminate damage to the environment and biosphere and stimulate the health and welfare of man; to enrich the understanding of the ecological systems and natural resources important to the Nation; and to establish a Council on Environmental Quality.

TITLE I

DECLARATION OF NATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY (83 Stat. 852; 42 U.S.C. 4331).

Policies and goals.

Sec. 101. (a) The Congress, recognizing the profound impact of man's activity on the interrelations of all components of the natural environment, particularly the profound influences of population growth, high-density urbanization, industrial expansion, resource exploitation, and new and expanding technological advances and recognizing further the critical importance of restoring and maintaining environmental quality to the overall welfare and development of man, declares that it is the continuing policy of the Federal Government, in cooperation with State and local governments, and other concerned public and private organizations, to use all practicable means and measures, including financial and technical assistance, in a manner calculated to foster and promote the general welfare, to create and maintain conditions under which man and nature can exist in productive harmony, and fulfill the social, economic, and other requirements of present and future generations of Americans.

[1] The Act is set forth as amended by Public Law 94-52 approved July 3. 1975 (89 Stat. 258), and Public Law 94-83 approved August 9, 1975 (89 Stat. 424).

(b) In order to carry out the policy set forth in this Act, it is the continuing responsibility of the Federal Government to use all practicable means, consistent with other essential considerations of national policy, to improve and coordinate Federal plans, functions, programs, and resources to the end that the Nation may—

(1) fulfill the responsibilities of each generation as trustee of the environment for succeeding generations;

(2) assure for all Americans safe, healthful, productive, and esthetically and culturally pleasing surroundings;

(3) attain the widest range of beneficial uses of the environment without degradation, risk to health or safety, or other undesirable and unintended consequences;

(4) preserve important historic, cultural, and natural aspects of our national heritage, and maintain, wherever possible, an environment which supports diversity and variety of individual choice;

(5) achieve a balance between population and resource use which will permit high standards of living and a wide sharing of life's amenities; and

(6) enchance the quality of renewable resources and approach the maximum attainable recycling of depletable resources.

(c) The Congress recognizes that each person should enjoy a healthful environment and that each person has a responsibility to contribute to the preservation and enhancement of the environment.

COOPERATION OF AGENCIES; REPORTS; AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION; RECOMMENDATIONS; INTERNATIONAL AND NATIONAL COORDINATION OF EFFORTS (83 Stat. 853; 89 Stat. 424; 42 U.S.C. 4332).

Administration.

Sec. 102. The Congress authorizes and directs that, to the fullest extent possible: (1) the policies, regulations, and public laws of the United States shall be interpreted and administered in accordance with the policies set forth in this Act, and (2) all agencies of the Federal Government shall—

(A) utilize a systematic, interdisciplinary approach which will insure the integrated use of the natural and social sciences and the environmental design arts in planning and in decisionmaking which may have an impact on man's environment;

(B) identify and develop methods and procedures, in consultation with the Council on Environmental Quality established by title II of this Act, which will insure that presently unquantified environmental amenities and values may be given appropriate consideration in decisionmaking along with economic and technical considerations;

(C) include in every recommendation or report on proposals for legislation and other major Federal actions significantly affecting the quality of the human environment, a detailed statement by the responsible official on—

(i) the environmental impact of the proposed action,

(ii) any adverse environmental effects which cannot be avoided should the proposal be implemented,

(iii) alternatives to the proposed action,

(iv) the relationship between local short-term uses of man's environment and the maintenance and enhancement of long-term productivity, and

(v) any irreversible and irretrievable commitments of resources which would be involved in the proposed action should it be implemented.

Copies of statements, etc.; availability.

81 Stat. 54.

Prior to making any detailed statement, the responsible Federal official shall consult with and obtain the comments of any Federal agency which has jurisdiction by law or special expertise with respect to any environmental impact involved. Copies of such statement and the comments and views of the appropriate Federal, State, and local agencies, which are authorized to develop and enforce environmental standards, shall be made available to the President, the Council on Environmental Quality and to the public as provided by section 552 of title 5, United States Code, and shall accompany the proposal through the existing agency review processes;

(D) Any detailed statement required under subparagraph (C) after January 1, 1970, for any major Federal action funded under a program of grants to States shall not be deemed to be legally insufficient solely by reason of having been prepared by a State agency or official, if:

(i) the State agency or official has statewide jurisdiction and has the responsibility for such action,

(ii) the responsible Federal official furnishes guidance and participates in such preparation,

(iii) the responsible Federal official independently evaluates such statement prior to its approval and adoption, and

(iv) after January 1, 1976, the responsible Federal official provides early notification to, and solicits the views of, any other State or any Federal land management entity of any action or any alternative thereto which may have significant impacts upon such State or affected Federal land management entity and, if there is any disagreement on such impacts, prepares a written assessment of such impacts and views for incorporation into such detailed statement.

The procedures in this subparagraph shall not relieve the Federal official of his responsibilities for the scope, objectivity, and content of the entire statement or of any other responsibility under this Act; and further, this subparagraph does not affect the legal sufficiency of statements prepared by State agencies with less than statewide jurisdiction.

(E) study, develop, and describe appropriate alternatives to recommended courses of action in any proposal which involves unresolved conflicts concerning alternative uses of available resources;

(F) recognize the worldwide and long-range character of environmental problems and, where consistent with the foreign policy of the United States, lend appropriate support to initiatives, resolutions, and programs designed to maximize international cooperation in anticipating and preventing a decline in the quality of mankind's world environment;

(G) make available to States, counties, municipalities, institutions, and individuals, advice and information useful in restoring, maintaining, and enhancing the quality of the environment;

(H) initiate and utilize ecological information in the planning and development of resource-oriented projects; and

(I) assist the Council on Environmental Quality established by title II of this Act.

CONFORMITY OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURES TO NATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY (83 Stat. 854; 42 U.S.C. 4333).

Policy review.

Sec. 103. All agencies of the Federal Government shall review their present statutory authority, administrative regulations, and current policies and procedures for the purpose of determining whether there are any deficiencies or inconsistencies therein which prohibit full compliance with the purposes and provisions of this Act and shall propose to the President not later than July 1, 1971, such measures as may be necessary to bring their authority and policies into conformity with the intent, purposes, and procedures set forth in this Act.

OTHER STATUTORY OBLIGATIONS OF AGENCIES (83 Stat. 854; 42 U.S.C. 4334).

Sec. 104. Nothing in Section 102 and 103 shall in any way affect the specific statutory obligations of any Federal agency (1) to comply with criteria or standards of environmental quality, (2) to coordinate or consult with any other Federal or State agency, or (3) to act, or refrain from acting contingent upon the recommendations or certification of any other Federal or State agency.

EFFORTS SUPPLEMENTAL TO EXISTING AUTHORIZATIONS (83 Stat. 854; 42 U.S.C. 4335).

Sec. 105. The policies and goals set forth in this Act are supplementary to those set forth in existing authorizations of Federal agencies.

TITLE II

COUNCIL ON ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY

REPORTS TO CONGRESS; RECOMMENDATIONS FOR LEGISLATION (83 Stat. 854; 42 U.S.C. 4341).

Report to Congress.

Sec. 201. The President shall transmit to the Congress annually beginning July 1, 1970, an Environmental Quality Report (hereinafter referred to as the "report") which shall set forth (1) the status and condition of the major natural, manmade, or altered environmental classes of the Nation, including, but not limited to, the air, the aquatic, including marine, estuarine, and fresh water, and the terrestrial environment, including, but not limited to, the forest, dryland, wetland, range, urban, suburban, and rural environment; (2) current and foreseeable trends in the quality, management and utilization of such environments and the effects of those trends on the social, economic, and other requirements of the Nation; (3) the adequacy of available natural resources for fulfilling human and economic requirements of the Nation in the light of expected population pressures; (4) a review of the programs and activities (including regulatory activities) of the Federal Government, the State and local governments, and nongovernmental entities or individuals, with particular reference to their effect on the environment and on the conservation, development and utilization of natural resources; and (5) a program for remedying the deficiencies of existing programs and activities, together with recommendations for legislation.

ESTABLISHMENT; MEMBERSHIP; CHAIRMAN; APPOINTMENTS (83 Stat. 854; 42 U.S.C. 4342).

Council on Environmental Quality.

Sec. 202. There is created in the Executive Office of the President a Council on Environmental Quality (hereinafter referred to as the "Council"). The Council shall be composed of three members who shall be appointed by the President to serve at his pleasure, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The President shall designate one of the members of the Council to serve as Chairman. Each member shall be a person who, as a result of his training, experience, and attainments, is exceptionally well qualified to analyze and interpret environmental trends and information of all kinds; to appraise programs and activities of the Federal Government in the light of the policy set forth in title I of this Act; to be conscious of and responsive to the scientific, economic, social, esthetic, and cultural needs and interests of the Nation; and to formulate and recommend national policies to promote the improvement of the quality of the environment.

EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONNEL, EXPERTS AND CONSULTANTS (83 Stat. 855; 89 Stat. 258; 42 U.S.C. 4343).

Sec. 203. (a) The Council may employ such officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this Act. In additon, the Council may employ and fix the compensation of such experts and consultants as may be necessary for the carrying out of its functions under this Act, in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code (but without regard to the last sentence thereof).

(b) Notwithstanding section 3679(b) of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. 665(b)), the Council may accept and employ voluntary and uncompensated services in furtherance of the purposes of the Council.

Voluntary and uncompensated services.

DUTIES AND FUNCTIONS (83 Stat. 855; 42 U.S.C. 4344).

Sec. 204. It shall be the duty and function of the Council—

Duties and functions.

(1) to assist and advise the President in the preparation of the Environmental Quality Report required by section 201;

(2) to gather timely and authoritative information concerning the conditions and trends in the quality of the environment both current and prospective, to analyze and interpret such information for the purpose of determining whether such conditions and trends are interfering, or are likely to interfere, with the achievement of the policy set forth in title I of this Act, and to compile and submit to the President studies relating to such conditions and trends;

(3) to review and appraise the various programs and activities of the Federal Government in the light of the policy set forth in title I of this Act for the purpose of determining the extent to which such programs and activities are contributing to the achievement of such policy, and to make recommendations to the President with respect thereto;

(4) to develop and recommend to the President national policies to foster and promote the improvement of environmental quality to meet the conservation, social, economic, health, and other requirements and goals of the Nation;

(5) to conduct investigations, studies, surveys, research and analyses relating to ecological systems and environmental quality;

(6) to document and define changes in the natural environment, including the plant and animal systems, and to accumulate necessary data and other information for a continuing analysis of these changes or trends and an interpretation of their underlying causes;

(7) to report at least once each year to the President on the state and condition of the environment; and

(8) to make and furnish such studies, reports thereon, and recommendations with respect to matters of policy and legislation as the President may request.

CONSULTATION WITH THE CITIZENS' ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY AND OTHER REPRESENTATIVES (83 Stat. 855; 42 U.S.C. 4345).

Sec. 205. In exercising its powers, functions, and duties under this Act, the Council shall—

(1) consult with the Citizens' Advisory Committee on Environmental Quality established by Executive Order numbered 11472, dated May 29, 1969, and with such representiatives of science, industry, agriculture, labor, conservation organizations, State and local governments and other groups, as it deems advisable; and

(2) utilize, to the fullest extent possible, the services, facilities, and information (including statistical information) of public and private agencies and organizations, and individuals, in order that duplication of effort and expense may be avoided, thus assuring that the Council's activities will not unnecessarily overlap or conflict with similar activities authorized by law and performed by established agencies.

TENURE AND COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS (83 Stat. 856; 42 U.S.C. 4346).

Tenure and compensation.

Sec. 206. Members of the Council shall serve full time and the Chairman of the Council shall be compensated at the rate provided for Level II of the Executive Schedule Pay Rates (5 U.S.C. 5313). The other members of the Council shall be compensated at the rate provided for Level IV of the Executive Schedule Pay Rates (5 U.S.C. 5315).

80 Stat. 460, 461.

81 Stat. 638.

TRAVEL REIMBURSEMENT BY PRIVATE ORGANIZATIONS AND FEDERAL, STATE, AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS (89 Stat. 258; 42 U.S.C. 4346a).

Sec. 207. The Council may accept reimbursements from any private nonprofit organization or from any department, agency, or instrumentality of the Federal Government, any State, or local government, for the reasonable travel expenses incurred by an officer or employee of the Council in connection with his attendance at any conference, seminar, or similar meeting conducted for the benefit of the Council.

EXPENDITURES IN SUPPORT OF INTERNATIONAL ACTIVITIES (89 Stat. 258; 42 U.S.C. 4346b).

Sec. 208. The Council may make expenditures in support of its international activities, including expenditures for: (1) international travel; (2) activities in implementation of international agreements; and (3) the support of international exchange programs in the United States and in foreign countries.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS (83 Stat. 856; 89 Stat. 258; 42 U.S.C. 4347).

Sec. 209. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this Act not to exceed $300,000 for fiscal year 1970, $700,000 for fiscal year 1971, and $1,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

Approved January 1, 1970.

§ 1. Short title of entire Act (82 Stat. 146).

This Act may be cited as the Consumer Credit Protection Act.

TITLE I—CONSUMER CREDIT COST DISCLOSURE

CHAPTER 1—GENERAL PROVISIONS

§ 101. Short title (82 Stat. 146).

This title may be cited as the Truth in Lending Act.

§ 102. Findings and declaration of purpose (82 Stat. 146; 88 Stat. 1511; 90 Stat. 257; 15 U.S.C. 1601).

(a) The Congress finds that economic stabilization would be enhanced and the competition among the various financial institutions and other firms engaged in the extension of consumer credit would be strengthened by the informed use of credit. The informed use of credit results from an awareness of the cost thereof by consumers. It is the purpose of this title to assure a meaningful disclosure of credit terms so that the consumer will be able to compare more readily the various credit terms available to him and avoid the uninformed use of credit, and to protect the consumer against inaccurate and unfair credit billing and credit card practices.

(b) The Congress also finds that there has been a recent trend toward leasing automobiles and other durable goods for consumer use as an alternative to installment credit sales and that these leases have been offered without adequate cost disclosures. It is the purpose of this title to assure a meaningful disclosure of the terms of leases of personal property for personal, family, or household purposes so as to enable the lessee to compare more readily the various lease terms available to him, limit balloon payments in consumer leasing, enable comparison of lease terms with credit terms where appropriate, and to assure meaningful and accurate disclosures of lease terms in advertisements.

§ 103. Definitions and rules of construction (82 Stat. 147; 84 Stat. 1126; 88 Stat. 1511; 15 U.S.C. 1602).

(a) The definitions and rules of construction set forth in this section are applicable for the purposes of this title.

(b) The term "Board" refers to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

(c) The term "organization" means a corporation, government or governmental subdivision or agency, trust, estate, partnership, cooperative, or association.

(d) The term "person" means a natural person or an organization.

(e) The term "credit" means the right granted by a creditor to a debtor to defer payment of debt or to incur debt and defer its payment.

(f) The term "creditor" refers only to creditors who regularly extend, or arrange for the extension of, credit which is payable by agreement in more than four installments or for which the payment of a finance charge is or may be required, whether in connection with loans, sales of property or services, or otherwise. For the purposes of the requirements imposed under chapter 4 and sections 127 (a) (6), 127(a)(7), 127(a)(8), 127(b)(1), 127(b)(2), 127(b)(3), 127(b)(9), and 127(b)(11) of chapter 2 of this title, the term "creditor" shall also include card issuers whether or not the amount due is payable by agreement in more than four installments or the payment of a finance charge is or may be required, and the Board shall, by regulation, apply these requirements to such card issuers, to the extent appropriate, even though the requirements are by their terms applicable only to creditors offering open end credit plans. The provisions of this title apply to any such creditor, irrespective of his or its status as a natural person or any type of organization.

(g) The term "credit sale" refers to any sale with respect to which credit is extended or arranged by the seller. The term includes any contract in the form of a bailment or lease if the bailee or lessee contracts to pay as compensation for use a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the aggregate value of the property and services involved and it is agreed that the bailee or lessee will become, or for no other or a nominal consideration has the option to become, the owner of the property upon full compliance with his obligations under the contract.

(h) The adjective "consumer", used with reference to a credit transaction, characterizes the transaction as one in which the party to whom credit is offered or extended is a natural person, and the money, property, or services which are the subject of the transaction are primarily for personal, family, household, or agricultural purposes.

(i) The term "open end credit plan" refers to a plan prescribing the terms of credit transactions which may be made thereunder from time to time and under the terms of which a finance charge may be computed on the outstanding unpaid balance from time to time thereunder.

(j) The term "adequate notice," as used in section 1643 of this title, means a printed notice to a cardholder which sets forth the pertinent facts clearly and conspicuously so that a person against whom it is to operate could reasonably be expected to have noticed it and understood its meaning. Such notice may be given to a cardholder by printing the notice on any credit card, or on each periodic statement of account, issued to the cardholder, or by any other means reasonably assuring the receipt thereof by the cardholder.

(k) The term "credit card" means any card, plate, coupon book or other credit device existing for the purpose of obtaining money, property, labor, or services on credit.

(l) The term "accepted credit card" means any credit card which the cardholder has requested and received or has signed or has used, or authorized another to use, for the purpose of obtaining money, property, labor, or services on credit.

(m) The term "cardholder" means any person to whom a credit card is issued or any person who has agreed with the card issuer to pay obligations arising from the issuance of a credit card to another person.

(n) The term "card issuer" means any person who issues a credit card, or the agent of such person with respect to such card.

(o) The term "unauthorized use," as used in section 1643 of this title, means a use of a credit card by a person other than the cardholder who does not have actual, implied, or apparent authority for such use and from which the cardholder receives no benefit.

(p) The term "discount" as used in section 167 means a reduction made from the regular price. The term "discount" as used in section 167 shall not mean a surcharge.

(q) The term "surcharge" as used in section 103 and section 167 means any means of increasing the regular price to a cardholder which is not imposed upon customers paying by cash, check, or similar means.

(r) The term "State" refers to any State, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the District of Columbia, and any territory or possession of the United States.

(s) Any reference to any requirement imposed under this title or any provision thereof includes reference to the regulations of the Board under this title or the provision thereof in question.

(t) The disclosure of an amount or percentage which is greater than the amount or percentage required to be disclosed under this title does not in itself constitute a violation of this title.

§ 104. Exempted transactions (82 Stat. 147; 88 Stat. 1517; 15 U.S.C. 1603).

This title does not apply to the following:

(1) Credit transactions involving extensions of credit for business or commercial purposes, or to government or governmental agencies or instrumentalities, or to organizations.

(2) Transactions in securities or commodities accounts by a broker-dealer registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

(3) Credit transactions, other than real property transactions, in which the total amount to be financed exceeds $25,000.

(4) Transactions under public utility tariffs, if the Board determines that a State regulatory body regulates the charges for the public utility services involved, the charges for delayed payment, and any discount allowed for early payment.

(5) Credit transactions primarily for agricultural purposes in which the total amount to be financed exceeds $25,000.

§105. Regulations (82 Stat. 148; 15 U.S.C. 1604).

The Board shall prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of this title. These regulations may contain such classifications, differentiations, or other provisions, and may provide for such adjustments and exceptions for any class of transactions, as in the judgment of the Board are necessary or proper to effectuate the purposes of this title, to prevent circumvention or evasion thereof, or to facilitate compliance therewith.

§ 106. Determination of finance charge (82 Stat. 148; 15 U.S.C. 1605).

Definition.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the amount of the finance charge in connection with any consumer credit transaction shall be determined as the sum of all charges, payable directly or indirectly by the person to whom the credit is extended, and imposed directly or indirectly by the creditor as an incident to the extension of credit, including any of the following types of charges which are applicable:

(1) Interest, time price differential, and any amount payable under a point, discount, or other system of additional charges.

(2) Service or carrying charge.

(3) Loan fee, finder's fee, or similar charge.

(4) Fee for an investigation or credit report.

(5) Premium or other charge for any guarantee or insurance protecting the creditor against the obligator's default or other credit loss.

Life, accident, or health insurance charges.

(b) Charges or premiums for credit life, accident, or health insurance written in connection with any consumer credit transaction shall be included in the finance charge unless

(1) the coverage of the debtor by the insurance is not a factor in the approval by the creditor of the extension of credit, and this fact is clearly disclosed in writing to the person applying for or obtaining the extension of credit; and

(2) in order to obtain the insurance in connection with the extension of credit, the person to whom the credit is extended must give specific affirmative written indication of his desire to do so after written disclosure to him of the cost thereof.

Liability insurance charges.

(c) Charges or premiums for insurance, written in connection with any consumer credit transaction, against loss of or damage to property or against liability arising out of the ownership or use of property, shall be included in the finance charge unless a clear and specific statement in writing is furnished by the creditor to the person to whom the credit is extended, setting forth the cost of the insurance if obtained from or through the creditor, and stating that the person to whom the credit is extended may choose the person through which the insurance is to be obtained.

Exemptions.

(d) If any of the following items is itemized and disclosed in accordance with the regulations of the Board in connection with any transaction, then the creditor need not include that item in the computation of the finance charge with respect to that transaction:

(1) Fees and charges prescribed by law which actually are or will be paid to public officials for determining the existence of or for perfecting or releasing or satisfying any security related to the credit transaction.

(2) The premium payable for any insurance in lieu of perfecting any security interest otherwise required by the creditor in connection with the transaction, if the premium does not exceed the fees and charges described in paragraph (1) which would otherwise be payable.

(3) Taxes.

(4) Any other type of charge which is not for credit and the exclusion of which from the finance charge is approved by the Board by regulation.

Exemptions, real property.

(e) The following items, when charged in connection with any extension of credit secured by an interest in real property, shall not be included in the computation of the finance charge with respect to that transaction:

(1) Fees or premiums for title examination, title insurance, or similar purposes.

(2) Fees for preparation of a deed, settlement statement, or other documents.

(3) Escrows for future payments of taxes and insurance.

(4) Fees for notarizing deeds and other documents.

(5) Appraisal fees.

(6) Credit reports.

§ 107. Determination of annual percentage rate (82 Stat. 149; 15 U.S.C. 1606).

Definition.

(a) The annual percentage rate applicable to any extension of consumer credit shall be determined, in accordance with the regulations of the Board,

(1) in the case of any extension of credit other than under an open end credit plan, as

(A) that nominal annual percentage rate which will yield a sum equal to the amount of the finance charge when it is applied to the unpaid balances of the amount financed, calculated according to the actuarial method of allocating payments made on a debt between the amount financed and the amount of the finance charge, pursuant to which a payment is applied first to the accumulated finance charge and the balance is applied to the unpaid amount financed; or

(B) the rate determined by any method prescribed by the Board as a method which materially simplifies computation while retaining reasonable accuracy as compared with the rate determined under subparagraph (A).

(2) in the case of any extension of credit under an open end credit plan, as the quotient (expressed as a percentage) of the total finance charge for the period to which it relates divided by the amount upon which the finance charge for that period is based, multiplied by the number of such periods in a year.

Computation for balances.

(b) Where a creditor imposes the same finance charge for balances within a specified range, the annual percentage rate shall be computed on the median balance within the range, except that if the Board determines that a rate so computed would not be meaningful, or would be materially misleading, the annual percentage rate shall be computed on such other basis as the Board may by regulation require.

Rounding rates.

(c) The annual percentage rate may be rounded to the nearest quarter of 1 per centum for credit transactions payable in substantially equal installments when a creditor determines the total finance charge on the basis of a single add-on, discount, periodic, or other rate, and the rate is converted into an annual percentage rate under procedures prescribed by the Board.

Rate tables or charts.

(d) The Board may authorize the use of rate tables or charts which may provide for the disclosure of annual percentage rates which vary from the rate determined in accordance with subsection (a) (1) (A) of this section by not more than such tolerances as the Board may allow. The Board may not allow a tolerance greater than 8 per centum of that rate except to simplify compliance where irregular payments are involved.

Reasonable tolerance.

(e) In the case of creditors determining the annual percentage rate in a manner other than as described in subsection (c) or (d) of this section, the Board may authorize other reasonable tolerances.

Form.

(f) Prior to January 1, 1971, any rate required under this subchapter to be disclosed as a percentage rate may, at the option of the creditor, be expressed in the form of the corresponding ratio of dollars per hundred dollars.

§ 108. Administrative enforcement (82 Stat. 150; 88 Stat. 1517; 15 U.S.C. 1607).

Enforcement agencies.

(a) Compliance with the requirements imposed under this title shall be enforced under

(1) section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, in the case of

(A) national banks, by the Comptroller of the Currency.

(B) member banks of the Federal Reserve System (other than national banks), by the Board.

(C) banks insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (other than members of the Federal Reserve System), by the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

(2) section 5 (d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, section 407 of the National Housing Act, and sections 6(i) and 17 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (acting directly or through the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation), in the case of any institution subject to any of those provisions.

(3) the Federal Credit Union Act, by the Director of the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions with respect to any Federal credit union.

(4) the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, by the Civil Aeronautics Board with respect to any air carrier or foreign air carrier subject to that Act.

(5) the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (except as provided in section 406 of that Act), by the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to any activities subject to that Act.

(6) the Farm Credit Act of 1971, by the Farm Credit Administration with respect to any Federal land bank, Federal land bank association, Federal intermediate credit bank, or production credit association.

(b) For the purpose of the exercise by any agency referred to in subsection (a) of its powers under any Act referred to in that subsection, a violation of any requirement imposed under this title shall be deemed to be a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act. In addition to its powers under any provision of law specifically referred to in subsection (a), each of the agencies referred to in that subsection may exercise, for the purpose of enforcing compliance with any requirement imposed under this title, any other authority conferred on it by law.

Additional agency powers.

Federal Trade Commission overall enforcing agency.

(c) Except to the extent that enforcement of the requirements imposed under this title is specifically committed to some other Government agency under subsection (a), the Federal Trade Commission shall enforce such requirements. For the purpose of the exercise by the Federal Trade Commission of its functions and powers under the Federal Trade Commission Act, a violation of any requirement imposed under this title shall be deemed a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act. All of the functions and powers of the Federal Trade Commission under the Federal Trade Commission Act are available to the Commission to enforce compliance by any person with the requirements imposed under this title, irrespective of whether that person is engaged in commerce or meets any other jurisdictional tests in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Rules and regulations.

(d) The authority of the Board to issue regulations under this title does not impair the authority of any other agency designated in this section to make rules respecting its own procedures in enforcing compliance with requirements imposed under this title.

§ 109. Views of other agencies (82 Stat. 150; 15 U.S.C. 1608).

In the exercise of its functions under this title, the Board may obtain upon request the views of any other Federal agency which, in the judgment of the Board, exercises regulatory or supervisory functions with respect to any class of creditors subject to this title.

§ 110. Advisory committee (82 Stat. 151; 15 U.S.C. 1609).

Repealed by Public Law 94-239 approved March 23, 1976, (90 Stat. 253).

§ 111. Effect on other laws (82 Stat. 151; 88 Stat. 1516; 15 U.S.C. 1610).

(a) This title does not annul, alter, or affect, or exempt any creditor from complying with, the laws of any State relating to the disclosure of information in connection with credit transactions, except to the extent that those laws are inconsistent with the provisions of this title or regulations thereunder, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency.

Inconsistent provisions.

(b) This title does not otherwise annul, alter or affect in any manner the meaning, scope or applicability of the laws of any State, including, but not limited to, laws relating to the types, amounts or rates of charges, or any element or elements of charges, permissible under such laws in connection with the extension or use of credit, nor does this title extend the applicability of those laws to any class of persons or transactions to which they would not otherwise apply.

State credit laws.

(c) In any action or proceeding in any court involving a consumer credit sale, the disclosure of the annual percentage rate as required under this title in connection with that sale may not be received as evidence that the sale was a loan or any type of transaction other than a credit sale.

Disclosures.

(d) Except as specified in sections 125, 130, and 166, this title and the regulations issued thereunder do not affect the validity or enforceability of any contract or obligation under State or Federal law.

Contracts under State or Federal law.

§ 112. Criminal liability for willful and knowing violation (82 Stat. 151; 15 U.S.C. 1611).

Whoever willfully and knowingly—

(1) gives false or inaccurate information or fails to provide information which he is required to disclose under the provisions of this title or any regulation issued thereunder,

(2) uses any chart or table authorized by the Board under section 107 in such a manner as to consistently understate the annual percentage rate determined under section 107(a) (1) (A), or

(3) otherwise fails to comply with any requirement imposed under this title, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 113. Penalties inapplicable to governmental agencies (82 Stat. 151; 15 U.S.C. 1612).

No civil or criminal penalty provided under this title for any violation thereof may be imposed upon the United States or any agency thereof, or upon any State or political subdivision thereof, or any agency of any State or political subdivision.

§ 114. Reports by Board and Attorney General (82 Stat. 151; 15 U.S.C. 1613).

Not later than January 3 of each year after 1969, the Board and the Attorney General shall, respectively, make reports to the Congress concerning the administration of their functions under this title, including such recommendations as the Board and the Attorney General, respectively, deem necessary or appropriate. In addition, each report of the Board shall include its assessment of the extent to which compliance with the requirements imposed under this title is being achieved.

§ 115. Liability of assignees (88 Stat. 1520; 15 U.S.C. 1614).

Except as otherwise specifically provided in this title, any civil action for a violation of this title which may be brought against the original creditor in any credit transaction may be maintained against any subsequent assignee of the original creditor where the violation from which the alleged liability arose is apparent on the face of the instrument assigned unless the assignment is involuntary.

CHAPTER 2—CREDIT TRANSACTIONS

§ 121. General requirement of disclosure (82 Stat. 152; 88 Stat. 1516, 1519; 89 Stat. 1159; 15 U.S.C. 1631).

(a) Each creditor shall disclose clearly and conspicuously, in accordance with the regulations of the Board, to each person to whom consumer credit is extended, the information required under this chapter or chapter 4.

(b) If there is more than one obligor, a creditor need not furnish a statement of information required under this chapter or chapter 4 to more than one of them.

(c) Repealed by Public Law 94-205 approved Jan. 2, 1976, 89 Stat. 1159.

§ 122. Form of disclosure; additional information (82 Stat. 152; 88 Stat. 1516, 1517; 15 U.S.C. 1632).

(a) Regulations of the Board need not require that disclosures pursuant to this chapter or chapter 4 be made in the order set forth in this chapter or chapter 4, and may permit the use of terminology different from that employed in this chapter or chapter 4 if it conveys substantially the same meaning.

(b) Any creditor may supply additional information or explanations with any disclosures required under this chapter or chapter 4.

§ 123. Exemption for State-regulated transactions (82 Stat. 152; 15 U.S.C. 1633).

The Board shall by regulation exempt from the requirements of this chapter any class of credit transactions within any State if it determines that under the law of that State the class of transactions is subject to requirements substantially similar to those imposed under this chapter, and that there is adequate provision for enforcement.

§ 124. Effect of subsequent occurrence (82 Stat. 152; 15 U.S.C. 1634).

If information disclosed in accordance with this chapter is subsequently rendered inaccurate as the result of any act, occurrence, or agreement subsequent to the delivery of the required disclosures, the inaccuracy resulting therefrom does not constitute a violation of this chapter.

§ 125. Right of rescission as to certain transactions (82 Stat. 153; 88 Stat. 1517, 1519; 15 U.S.C. 1635).

Obligor's right to rescind.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, in the case of any consumer credit transaction in which a security interest, including any such interest arising by operation of law, is or will be retained or acquired in any real property which is used or is expected to be used as the residence of the person to whom credit is extended, the obligor shall have the right to rescind the transaction until midnight of the third business day following the consummation of the transaction or the delivery of the disclosures required under this section and all other material disclosures required under this chapter, whichever is later, by notifying the creditor, in accordance with regulations of the Board, of his intention to do so. The creditor shall clearly and conspicuously disclose, in accordance with regulations of the Board, to any obligor in a transaction subject to this section the rights of the obligor under this section. The creditor shall also provide, in accordance with regulations of the Board, an adequate opportunity to the obligor to exercise his right to rescind any transaction subject to this section.

Return of money or property following rescission.

(b) When an obligor exercises his right to rescind under subsection (a), he is not liable for any finance or other charge, and any security interest given by the obligor, including any such interest arising by operation of law, becomes void upon such a rescission. Within ten days after receipt of a notice of rescission, the creditor shall return to the obligor any money or property given as earnest money, downpayment, or otherwise, and shall take any action necessary or appropriate to reflect the termination of any security interest created under the transaction. If the creditor has delivered any property to the obligor, the obligor may retain possession of it. Upon the performance of the creditor's obligations under this section, the obligor shall tender the property to the creditor, except that if return of the property in kind would be impracticable or inequitable, the obligor shall tender its reasonable value. Tender shall be made at the location of the property or at the residence of the obligor, at the option of the obligor. If the creditor does not take possession of the property within ten days after tender by the obligor, ownership of the property vests in the obligor without obligation on his part to pay for it.

(c) Notwithstanding any rule of evidence, written acknowledgment of receipt of any disclosures required under this title by a person to whom a statement is required to be given pursuant to this section does no more than create a rebuttable presumption of delivery thereof.

Modification of rights.

(d) The Board may, if it finds that such action is necessary in order to permit homeowners to meet bona fide personal financial emergencies, prescribe regulations authorizing the modification or waiver of any rights created under this section to the extent and under the circumstances set forth in those regulations.

Exemption for first liens.

(e) This section does not apply to the creation or retention of a first lien against a dwelling to finance the acquisition of that dwelling or to a consumer credit transaction in which an agency of a State is the creditor.

Time limit to exercise right.

(f) An obligor's right of rescission shall expire three years after the date of consummation of the transaction or upon the sale of the property, whichever occurs earlier, notwithstanding the fact that the disclosures required under this section or any other material disclosures required under this chapter have not been delivered to the obligor.

If a creditor transmits periodic statements in connection with any extension of consumer credit other than under an open end consumer credit plan, then each of those statements shall set forth each of the following items:

(1) The annual percentage rate of the total finance charge.

(2) The date by which, or the period (if any) within which, payment must be made in order to avoid additional finance charges or other charges.

(3) Such of the items set forth in section 127(b) as the Board may by regulation require as appropriate to the terms and conditions under which the extension of credit in question is made.

§ 127. Open end consumer credit plans (82 Stat. 153; 88 Stat. 1511, 1519, 1521; 15 U.S.C. 1637).

Required disclosures by creditor.

(a) Before opening any account under an open end consumer credit plan, the creditor shall disclose to the person to whom credit is to be extended each of the following items, to the extent applicable:

(1) The conditions under which a finance charge may be imposed, including the time period (if any) within which any credit extended may be repaid without incurring a finance charge, except that the creditor may, at his election and without disclosure, impose no such finance charge if payment is received after the termination of such time period.

(2) The method of determining the balance upon which a finance charge will be imposed.

(3) The method of determining the amount of the finance charge, including any minimum or fixed amount imposed as a finance charge.

(4) Where one or more periodic rates may be used to compute the finance charge, each such rate, the range of balances to which it is applicable, and the corresponding nominal annual percentage rate determined by multiplying the periodic rate by the number of periods in a year.

(5) If the creditor so elects,

(A) the average effective annual percentage rate of return received from accounts under the plan for a representative period of time; or

(B) whenever circumstances are such that the computation of a rate under subparagraph (A) would not be feasible or practical, or would be misleading or meaningless, a projected rate of return to be received from accounts under the plan.

The Board shall prescribe regulations, consistent with commonly accepted standards for accounting or statistical procedures, to carry out the purposes of this paragraph.

(6) The conditions under which any other charges may be imposed, and the method by which they will be determined.

(7) The conditions under which the creditor may retain or acquire any security interest in any property to secure the payment of any credit extended under the plan, and a description of the interest or interests which may be so retained or acquired.

(8) A statement, in a form prescribed by regulations of the Board of the protection provided by sections 161 and 170 to an obligor and the creditor's responsibilities under sections 162 and 170. With respect to each of two billing cycles per year, at semi-annual intervals, the creditor shall transmit such statement to each obligor to whom the creditor is required to transmit a statement pursuant to section 127(b) for such billing cycle.

Statement with each billing cycle.

(b) The creditor of any account under an open end consumer credit plan shall transmit to the obligor, for each billing cycle at the end of which there is an outstanding balance in that account or with respect to which a finance charge is imposed, a statement setting forth each of the following items to the extent applicable:

(1) The outstanding balance in the account at the beginning of the statement period.

(2) The amount and date of each extension of credit during the period and a brief identification on or accompanying the statement of each extension of credit in a form prescribed by regulations of the Board sufficient to enable the obligor to identify the transaction, or relate it to copies of sales vouchers or similar instruments previously furnished.

(3) The total amount credited to the account during the period.

(4) The amount of any finance charge added to the account during the period, itemized to show the amounts, if any, due to the application of percentage rates and the amount, if any, imposed as a minimum or fixed charge.

(5) Where one or more periodic rates may be used to compute the finance charge, each such rate, the range of balances to which it is applicable, and, unless the annual percentage rate (determined under section 107(a) (2)) is required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (6), the corresponding nominal annual percentage rate determined by multiplying the periodic rate by the number of periods in a year.

(6) Where the total finance charge exceeds 50 cents for a monthly or longer billing cycle, or the pro rata part of 50 cents for a billing cycle shorter than monthly, the total finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate (determined under section 107(a)(2)), except that if the finance charge is the sum of two or more products of a rate times a portion of the balance, the creditor may, in lieu of disclosing a single rate for the total charge, disclose each such rate expressed as an annual percentage rate, and the part of the balance to which it is applicable.

(7) At the election of the creditor, the average effective annual percentage rate of return (or the projected rate) under the plan as prescribed in subsection (a) (5).

(8) The balance on which the finance charge was computed and a statement of how the balance was determined. If the balance is determined without first deducting all credits during the period, that fact and the amount of such payments shall also be disclosed.

(9) The outstanding balance in the account at the end of the period.

(10) The date by which or the period (if any) within which, payment must be made to avoid additional finance charges, except that the creditor may, at his election and without disclosure, impose no such additional finance charge if payment is received after such date or the termination of such period.

(11) The address to be used by the creditor for the purpose of receiving billing inquiries from the obligor.

Time for making disclosures.

(c) In the case of any existing account under an open end consumer credit plan having an outstanding balance of more than $1 at or after the close of the creditor's first full billing cycle under the plan after the effective date of subsection (a) or any amendments thereto, the items described in subsection (a), to the extent applicable and not previously disclosed, shall be disclosed in a notice mailed or delivered to the obligor not later than the time of mailing the next statement required by subsection (b).

§ 128. Sales not under open end credit plans (82 Stat. 155; 15 U.S.C. 1638).

Required disclosures by creditor.

(a) In connection with each consumer credit sale not under an open end credit plan, the creditor shall disclose each of the following items which is applicable:

(1) The cash price of the property or service purchased.

(2) The sum of any amounts credited as downpayment (including any trade-in).

(3) The difference between the amount referred to in paragraph (1) and the amount referred to in paragraph (2).

(4) All other charges, individually itemized, which are included in the amount of the credit extended but which are not part of the finance charge.

(5) The total amount to be financed (the sum of the amount described in paragraph (3) plus the amount described in paragraph (4)).

(6) Except in the case of a sale of a dwelling, the amount of the finance charge, which may in whole or in part be designated as a time-price differential or any similar term to the extent applicable.

(7) The finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate except in the case of a finance charge

(A) which does not exceed $5 and is applicable to an amount financed not exceeding $75, or

(B) which does not exceed $7.50 and is applicable to an amount financed exceeding $75.

A creditor may not divide a consumer credit sale into two or more sales to avoid the disclosure of an annual percentage rate pursuant to this paragraph.

(8) The number, amount, and due dates or periods of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness.

(9) The default, delinquency, or similar charges payable in the event of late payments.

(10) A description of any security interest held or to be retained or acquired by the creditor in connection with the extension of credit, and a clear identification of the property to which the security interest relates.

Form and time of disclosures.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the disclosures required under subsection (a) shall be made before the credit is extended, and may be made by disclosing the information in the contract or other evidence of indebtedness to be signed by the purchaser.

Mail or telephone orders disclosures.

(c) If a creditor receives a purchase order by mail or telephone without personal solicitation, and the cash price and the deferred payment price and the terms of financing, including the annual percentage rate, are set forth in the creditor's catalog or other printed material distributed to the public, then the disclosures required under subsection (a) may be made at any time not later than the date the first payment is due.

(d) If a consumer credit sale is one of a series of consumer credit sales transactions made pursuant to an agreement providing for the addition of the deferred payment price of that sale to an existing outstanding balance, and the person to whom the credit is extended has approved in writing both the annual percentage rate or rates and the method of computing the finance charge or charges, and the creditor retains no security interest in any property as to which he has received payments aggregating the amount of the sales price including any finance charges attributable thereto, then the disclosures required under subsection (a) for the particular sale may be made at any time not later than the date the first payment for that sale is due. For the purposes of this subsection, in the case of items purchased on different dates, the first purchased shall be deemed first paid for, and in the case of items purchased on the same date, the lowest priced shall be deemed first paid for.

Deferrals or extensions.

§ 129. Consumer loans not under open end credit plans (82 Stat. 156; 15 U.S.C. 1639).

(a) Any creditor making a consumer loan or otherwise extending consumer credit in a transaction which is neither a consumer credit sale nor under an open end consumer credit plan shall disclose each of the following items, to the extent applicable:

Required disclosures by creditors.

(1) The amount of credit of which the obligor will have the actual use, or which is or will be paid to him or for his account or to another person on his behalf.

(2) All charges, individually itemized, which are included in the amount of credit extended but which are not part of the finance charge.

(3) The total amount to be financed (the sum of the amounts referred to in paragraph (1) plus the amounts referred to in paragraph (2)).

(4) Except in the case of a loan secured by a first lien on a dwelling and made to finance the purchase of that dwelling, the amount of the finance charge.

(5) The finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate except in the case of a finance charge

(A) which does not exceed $5 and is applicable to an extension of consumer credit not exceeding $75, or

(B) which does not exceed $7.50 and is applicable to an extension of consumer credit exceeding $75.

A creditor may not divide an extension of credit into two or more transactions to avoid the disclosure of an annual percentage rate pursuant to this paragraph.

(6) The number, amount, and the due dates or periods of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness.

(7) The default, delinquency, or similar charges payable in the event of late payments.

(8) A description of any security interest held or to be retained or acquired by the creditor in connection with the extension of credit, and a clear identification of the property to which the security interest relates.

Form and time of disclosures.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the disclosures required by subsection (a) shall be made before the credit is extended, and may be made by disclosing the information in the note or other evidence of indebtedness to be signed by the obligor.

Disclosures, requests for extension of credit.

(c) If a creditor receives a request for an extension of credit by mail or telephone without personal solicitation and the terms of financing, including the annual percentage rate for representative amounts of credit, are set forth in the creditor's printed material distributed to the public, or in the contract of loan or other printed material delivered to the obligor, then the disclosures required under subsection (a) may be made at any time not later than the date the first payment is due.

§ 130. Civil liability (82 Stat. 157; 88 Stat. 1518; 90 Stat. 197; 15 U.S.C. 1640).

Failure to disclose.

Individual action.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, any creditor who fails to comply with any requirement imposed under this chapter or chapter 4 or 5 of this title with respect to any person is liable to such person in an amount equal to the sum of—

(1) any actual damage sustained by such person as a result of the failure;

Action relating to consumer lease.

(2)(A)(i) in the case of an individual action twice the amount of any finance charge in connection with the transaction, or (ii) in the case of an individual action relating to a consumer lease under chapter 5 of this title, 25 per centum of the total amount of monthly payments under the lease, except that the liability under this subparagraph shall not be less than $100 nor greater than $1,000; or Class action.

(B) in the case of a class action, such amount as the court may allow, except that as to each member of the class no minimum recovery shall be applicable, and the total recovery in such action shall not be more than the lesser of $500,000 or 1 per centum of the net worth of the creditor; and

(3) in the case of any successful action to enforce the foregoing liability, the costs of the action, together with a reasonable attorney's fee as determined by the court.

Factors determining amount of award.

In determining the amount of award in any class action, the court shall consider, among other relevant factors, the amount of any actual damages awarded, the frequency and persistence of failures of compliance by the creditor, the resources of the creditor, the number of persons adversely affected, and the extent to which the creditor's failure of compliance was intentional.

Correction of errors.

(b) A creditor has no liability under this section for any failure to comply with any requirement imposed under this chapter or chapter 5, if within fifteen days after discovering an error, and prior to the institution of an action under this section or the receipt of written notice of the error, the creditor notifies the person concerned of the error and makes whatever adjustments in the appropriate account are necessary to insure that the person will not be required to pay a charge in excess of the amount or percentage rate actually disclosed.

Bona fide errors.

(c) A creditor may not be held liable in any action brought under this section for a violation of this title if the creditor shows by a preponderance of evidence that the violation was not intentional and resulted from a bona fide error not withstanding the maintenance of procedures reasonably adapted to avoid any such error.

Liability of subsequent assignees.

(d) Any action which may be brought under this section against the original creditor in any credit transaction involving a security interest in real property may be maintained against any subsequent assignee of the original creditor where the assignee, its subsidiaries, or affiliates were in a continuing business relationship with the original creditor either at the time the credit was extended or at the time of the assignment, unless the assignment was involuntary, or the assignee shows by a preponderance of evidence that it did not have reasonable grounds to believe that the original creditor was engaged in violations of this chapter, and that it maintained procedures reasonably adapted to apprise it of the existence of any such violations.

Jurisdiction of courts.

(e) Any action under this section may be brought in any United States district court, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction, within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation.

Good faith compliance.

(f) No provision of this section or section 112 imposing any liability shall apply to any act done or omitted in good faith in conformity with any rule, regulation, or interpretation thereof by the Board or in conformity with any interpretation or approval by an official or employee of the Federal Reserve System duly authorized by the Board to issue such interpretations or approvals under such procedures as the Board may prescribe therefor, notwithstanding that after such act or omission has occurred, such rule, regulation, interpretation, or approval is amended, rescinded, or determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.

Multiple failures to disclose.

(g) The multiple failure to disclose to any person any information required under this chapter or chapter 4 or 5 of this title to be disclosed in connection with a single account under an open end consumer credit plan, other single consumer credit sale, consumer loan, consumer lease or other extension of consumer credit, shall entitle the person to a single recovery under this section but continued failure to disclose after a recovery has been granted shall give rise to rights to additional recoveries.

Offset from amount owed to creditor.

(h) A person may not take any action to offset any amount for which a creditor is potentially liable to such person under subsection (a)(2) against any amount owing to such creditor by such person, unless the amount of the creditor's liability to such person has been determined by judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction in an action to which such person was a party.

§ 131. Written acknowledgment as proof of receipt (82 Stat. 157; 15 U.S.C. 1641).

Except as provided in section 125 (c) and except in the case of actions brought under section 130 (d), in any action or proceeding by or against any subsequent assignee of the original creditor without knowledge to the contrary by the assignee when he acquires the obligation, written acknowledgment of receipt by a person to whom a statement is required to be given pursuant to this title shall be conclusive proof of the delivery thereof and, unless the violation is apparent on the face of the statement, of compliance with this chapter. This section does not affect the rights of the obligor in any action against the original creditor.

§ 132. Issuance of credit cards (84 Stat. 1126; 15 U.S.C. 1642).

Prohibition.

No credit card shall be issued except in response to a request or application therefor. This prohibition does not apply to the issuance of a credit card in renewal of, or in substitution for, an accepted credit card.

§ 133. Liability of holder of credit card (84 Stat. 1126; 15 U.S.C. 1643).

Limits of liability.

(a) A cardholder shall be liable for the unauthorized use of a credit card only if the card is an accepted credit card, the liability is not in excess of $50, the card issuer gives adequate notice to the cardholder of the potential liability, the card issuer has provided the cardholder with a self-addressed, prestamped notification to be mailed by the cardholder in the event of the loss of theft of the credit card, and the unauthorized use occurs before the cardholder has notified the card issuer that an unauthorized use of the credit card has occurred or may occur as the result of loss, theft, or otherwise. Notwithstanding the foregoing, no cardholder shall be liable for the unauthorized use of any credit card which was issued on or after the effective date of this section, and, after the expiration of twelve months following such effective date, no cardholder shall be liable for the unauthorized use of any credit card regardless of the date of its issuance, unless (1) the conditions of liability specified in the preceding sentence are met, and (2) the card issuer has provided a method whereby the user of such card can be identified as the person authorized to use it. For the purposes of this section, a cardholder notifies a card issuer by taking such steps as may be reasonably required in the ordinary course of business to provide the card issuer with the pertinent information whether or not any particular officer, employee, or agent of the card issuer does in fact receive such information.

(b) In any action by a card issuer to enforce liability for the use of a credit card, the burden of proof is upon the card issuer to show that the use was authorized or, if the use was unauthorized, then the burden of proof is upon the card issuer to show that the conditions of liability for the unauthorized use of a credit card, as set forth in subsection (a), have been met.

Burden of proof.

(c) Nothing in this section imposes liability upon a cardholder for the unauthorized use of a credit card in excess of his liability for such use under other applicable law or under any agreement with the card issuer.

Liability by other laws.

(d) Except as provided in this section, a cardholder incurs no liability from the unauthorized use of a credit card.

§ 134. Fraudulent use of credit card (84 Stat. 1127; 88 Stat. 1520; 15 U.S.C. 1644).

(a) Whoever knowingly in a transaction affecting interstate or foreign commerce, uses or attempts or conspires to use any counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained credit card to obtain money, goods, services, or anything else of value which within any one-year period has a value aggregating $1,000 or more; or

(b) Whoever, with unlawful or fraudulent intent, transports or attempts or conspires to transport in interstate or foreign commerce a counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained credit card knowing the same to be counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained; or

(c) Whoever, with unlawful or fraudulent intent, uses any instrumentality of interstate or foreign commerce to sell or transport a counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained credit card knowing the same to be counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained; or

(d) Whoever knowingly receives, conceals, uses, or transports money, goods, services, or anything else of value (except tickets for interstate or foreign transportation) which (1) within any one-year period has a value aggregating $1,000 or more, (2) has moved in or is part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce, and (3) has been obtained with a counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained credit card; or

(e) Whoever knowingly receives, conceals, uses, sells, or transports in interstate or foreign commerce one or more tickets for interstate or foreign transportation, which (1) within any one-year period have a value aggregating $500 or more, and (2) have been purchased or obtained with one or more counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained credit cards; or

(f) Whoever in a transaction affecting interstate or foreign commerce furnishes money, property, services, or anything else of value, which within any one-year period has a value aggregating $1,000 or more, through the use of any counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained credit card knowing the same to be counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained—shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

§ 135. Business credit cards (88 Stat. 1519; 15 U.S.C. 1645).

Limits on liability of employees.

The exemption provided by section 104(1) does not apply to the provisions of sections 132, 133, and 134, except that a card issuer and a business or other organization which provides credit cards issued by the same card issuer to ten or more of its employees may by contract agree as to liability of the business or other organization with respect to unauthorized use of such credit cards without regard to the provisions of section 133, but in no case may such business or other organization or card issuer impose liability upon any employee with respect to unauthorized use of such a credit card except in accordance with and subject to the limitations of section 133.

CHAPTER 3—CREDIT ADVERTISING

§ 141. Catalogs and multiple-page advertisements (82 Stat. 158; 15 U.S.C. 1661).

For the purposes of this chapter, a catalog or other multiple-page advertisement shall be considered a single advertisement if it clearly and conspicuously displays a credit terms table on which the information required to be stated under this chapter is clearly set forth.

§ 142. Advertising of downpayments and installments (82 Stat. 158; 15 U.S.C. 1662).

No advertisement to aid, promote, or assist directly or indirectly any extension of consumer credit may state

(1) that a specific periodic consumer credit amount or installment amount can be arranged, unless the creditor usually and customarily arranges credit payments or installments for that period and in that amount.

(2) that a specified downpayment is required in connection with any extension of consumer credit, unless the creditor usually and customarily arranges downpayments in that amount.

§ 143. Advertising of open end credit plans (82 Stat. 158; 15 U.S.C. 1663).

No advertisement to aid, promote, or assist directly or indirectly the extension of consumer credit under an open end credit plan may set forth any of the specific terms of that plan or the appropriate rate determined under section 127(a)(5) unless it also clearly and conspicuously sets forth all of the following items:

(1) The time period, if any, within which any credit extended may be repaid without incurring a finance charge.

(2) The method of determining the balance upon which a finance charge will be imposed.

(3) The method of determining the amount of the finance charge, including any minimum or fixed amount imposed as a finance charge.

(4) Where periodic rates may be used to compute the finance charge, the periodic rates expressed as annual percentage rates.

(5) Such other or additional information for the advertising of open end credit plans as the Board may by regulation require to provide for adequate comparison of credit costs as between different types of open end credit plans.

§ 144. Advertising of credit other than open end plans (82 Stat. 158; 15 U.S.C. 1664).

Open end credit plans excluded.

(a) Except as provided in subsection (b), this section applies to any advertisement to aid, promote, or assist directly or indirectly any consumer credit sale, loan, or other extension of credit subject to the provisions of this title, other than an open end credit plan.

Residential real estate.

(b) The provisions of this section do not apply to advertisements of residential real estate except to the extent that the Board may by regulation require.

Rate of finance charge.

(c) If any advertisement to which this section applies states the rate of a finance charge, the advertisement shall state the rate of that charge expressed as an annual percentage rate.

Required disclosures.

(d) If any advertisement to which this section applies states the amount of the downpayment, if any, the amount of any installment payment, the dollar amount of any finance charge, or the number of installments or the period of repayment, then the advertisement shall state all of the following items:

(1) The cash price or the amount of the loan as applicable.

(2) The downpayment, if any.

(3) The number, amount, and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if the credit is extended.

(4) The rate of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate.

§ 145. Nonliability of media (82 Stat. 159; 15 U.S.C. 1665).

There is no liability under this chapter on the part of any owner or personnel, as such, of any medium in which an advertisement appears or through which it is disseminated.

§ 146. More-than-four-installment rule (88 Stat. 1517; 15 U.S.C. 1665a).

Any advertisement to aid, promote, or assist directly or indirectly the extension of consumer credit repayable in more than four installments shall, unless a finance charge is imposed, clearly and conspicuously state, in accordance with the regulations of the Board:

"THE COST OF CREDIT IS INCLUDED IN THE PRICE QUOTED FOR THE GOODS AND SERVICES."

CHAPTER 4—CREDIT BILLING

§ 161. Correction of billing errors (88 Stat. 1512; 15 U.S.C. 1666).

(a) If a creditor, within sixty days after having transmitted to an obligor a statement of the obligor's account in connection with an extension of consumer credit, receives at the address disclosed under section 127(b)(11) a written notice (other than notice on a payment stub or other payment medium supplied by the creditor if the creditor so stipulates with the disclosure required under section 127(a)(8)) from the obligor in which the obligor—

Written notice to creditor.

(1) sets forth or otherwise enables the creditor to identify the name and account number (if any) of the obligor,

Contents of notice.

(2) indicates the obligor's belief that the statement contains a billing error and the amount of such billing error, and

(3) sets forth the reasons for the obligor's belief (to the extent applicable) that the statement contains a billing error,

Creditor procedure.

the creditor shall, unless the obligor has, after giving such written notice and before the expiration of the time limits herein specified, agreed that the statement was correct—

(A) not later than thirty days after the receipt of the notice, send a written acknowledgement thereof to the obligor, unless the action required in subparagraph (B) is taken within such thirty-day period, and

(B) not later than two complete billing cycles of the creditor (in no event later than ninety days) after the receipt of the notice and prior to taking any action to collect the amount, or any part thereof, indicated by the obligor under paragraph (2) either—

(i) make appropriate corrections in the account of the obligor, including the crediting of any finance charges on amounts erroneously billed, and transmit to the obligor a notification of such corrections and the creditor's explanation of any change in the amount indicated by the obligor under paragraph (2) and, if any such change is made and the obligor so requests, copies of documentary evidence of the obligor's indebtedness; or

(ii) send a written explanation or clarification to the obligor, after having conducted an investigation, setting forth to the extent applicable the reasons why the creditor believes the account of the obligor was correctly shown in the statement and, upon request of the obligor, provide copies of documentary evidence of the obligor's indebtedness. In the case of a billing error where the obligor alleges that the creditor's billing statement reflects goods not delivered to the obligor or his designee in accordance with the agreement made at the time of the transaction, a creditor may not construe such amount to be correctly shown unless he determines that such goods were actually delivered, mailed, or otherwise sent to the obligor and provides the obligor with a statement of such determination.

After complying with the provisions of this subsection with respect to an alleged billing error, a creditor has no further responsibility under this section if the obligor continues to make substantially the same allegation with respect to such error.

Definitions.

(b) For the purpose of this section, a "billing error" consists of any of the following:

(1) A reflection on a statement of an extension of credit which was not made to the obligor or, if made, was not in the amount reflected on such statement.

(2) A reflection on a statement of an extension of credit for which the obligor requests additional clarification including documentary evidence thereof.

(3) A reflection on a statement of goods or services not accepted by the obligor or his designee or not delivered to the obligor or his designee in accordance with the agreement made at the time of a transaction.

(4) The creditor's failure to reflect properly on a statement a payment made by the obligor or a credit issued to the obligor.

(5) A computation error or similar error of an accounting nature of the creditor on a statement.

(6) Any other error described in regulations of the Board.

Action by creditor to collect amount of billing error.

(c) For the purposes of this section, "action to collect the amount, or any part thereof, indicated by an obligor under paragraph (2)" does not include the sending of statements of account to the obligor following written notice from the obligor as specified under subsection (a), if—

(1) the obligor's account is not restricted or closed because of the failure of the obligor to pay the amount indicated under paragraph (2) of subsection (a), and

(2) the creditor indicates the payment of such amount is not required pending the creditor's compliance with this section. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit any action by a creditor to collect any amount which has not been indicated by the obligor to contain a billing error.

Restricting or closing by creditor of account containing billing error.

(d) Pursuant to regulations of the Board, a creditor operating an open end consumer credit plan may not, prior to the sending of the written explanation or clarification required under paragraph (B)(ii), restrict or close an account with respect to which the obligor has indicated pursuant to subsection (a) that he believes such account to contain a billing error solely because of the obligor's failure to pay the amount indicated to be in error. Nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to prohibit a creditor from applying against the credit limit on the obligor's account the amount indicated to be in error.

Noncompliance.

(e) Any creditor who fails to comply with the requirements of this section or section 162 forfeits any right to collect from the obligor the amount indicated by the obligor under paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section, and any finance charges thereon, except that the amount required to be forfeited under this subsection may not exceed $50.

§ 162. Regulation of credit reports (88 Stat. 1513; 15 U.S.C. 1666a).

Reports by creditor on obligor's failure to pay amount regarded as billing error.

(a) After receiving a notice from an obligor as provided in section 161(a), a creditor or his agent may not directly or indirectly threaten to report to any person adversely on the obligor's credit rating or credit standing because of the obligor's failure to pay the amount indicated by the obligor under section 161(a)(2), and such amount may not be reported as delinquent to any third party until the creditor has met the requirements of section 161 and has allowed the obligor the same number of days (not less than ten) thereafter to make payment as is provided under the credit agreement with the obligor for the payment of undisputed amounts.

Notification of obligor of parties notified of delinquency.

(b) If a creditor receives a further written notice from an obligor that an amount is still in dispute within the time allowed for payment under subsection (a) of this section, a creditor may not report to any third party that the amount of the obligor is delinquent because the obligor has failed to pay an amount which he has indicated under section 161(a)(2), unless the creditor also reports that the amount is in dispute and, at the same time, notifies the obligor of the name and address of each party to whom the creditor is reporting information concerning the delinquency.

Notification of resolved delinquencies.

(c) A creditor shall report any subsequent resolution of any delinquencies reported pursuant to subsection (b) to the parties to whom such delinquencies were initially reported.

§ 163. Length of billing period (88 Stat. 1514; 15 U.S.C. 1666b).

Length of billing period in credit statement for imposition of finance charge.

(a) If an open end consumer credit plan provides a time period within which an obligor may repay any portion of the credit extended without incurring an additional finance charge, such additional finance charge may not be imposed with respect to such portion of the credit extended for the billing cycle of which such period is a part unless a statement which includes the amount upon which the finance charge for that period is based was mailed at least fourteen days prior to the date specified in the statement by which payment must be made in order to avoid imposition of that finance charge.

Effect of failure of timely mailing or delivery of statement.

(b) Subsection (a) does not apply in any case where a creditor has been prevented, delayed, or hindered in making timely mailing or delivery of such periodic statement within the time period specified in such subsection because of an act of God, war, natural disaster, strike, or other excusable or justifiable cause, as determined under regulations of the Board.

§ 164. Prompt crediting of payments (88 Stat. 1514; 15 U.S.C. 1666c).

Payments received from an obligor under an open end consumer credit plan by the creditor shall be posted promptly to the obligor's account as specified in regulations of the Board. Such regulations shall prevent a finance charge from being imposed on any obligor if the creditor has received the obligor's payment in readily identifiable form in the amount, manner, location, and time indicated by the creditor to avoid the imposition thereof.

§ 165. Crediting excess payments (88 Stat. 1514; 15 U.S.C. 1666d).

Whenever an obligor transmits funds to a creditor in excess of the total balance due on an open end consumer credit account, the creditor shall promptly (1) upon request of the obligor refund the amount of the overpayment, or (2) credit such amount to the obligor's account.

§ 166. Prompt notification of returns (88 Stat. 1514; 15 U.S.C. 1666e).

With respect to any sales transaction where a credit card has been used to obtain credit, where the seller is a person other than the card issuer, and where the seller accepts or allows a return of the goods or forgiveness of a debit for services which were the subject of such sale, the seller shall promptly transmit to the credit card issuer, a credit statement with respect thereto and the credit card issuer shall credit the account of the obligor for the amount of the transaction.

§ 167. Use of cash discounts (88 Stat. 1515; 90 Stat. 197; 15 U.S.C. 1666f).

(a) (1) With respect to credit card which may be used for extensions of credit in sales transactions in which the seller is a person other than the card issuer, the card issuer may not, by contract or otherwise, prohibit any such seller from offering a discount to a cardholder to induce the cardholder to pay by cash, check, or similar means rather than use a credit card.

*(2) No seller in any sales transaction may impose a surcharge on a cardholder who elects to use a credit card in lieu of payment by cash, check, or similar means.

Credit card surcharge, prohibition.

(b) With respect to any sales transaction, any discount not in excess of 5 per centum offered by the seller for the purpose of inducing payment by cash, check, or other means not involving the use of a credit card shall not constitute a finance charge as determined under section 106, if such discount is offered to all prospective buyers and its availability is disclosed to all prospective buyers clearly and conspicuously in accordance with regulations of the Board.

§ 168. Prohibition of tie-in services (88 Stat. 1515; 15 U.S.C. 1666g).

Notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, a card issuer may not require a seller, as a condition to participating in a credit card plan, to open an account with or procure any other service from the card issuer or its subsidiary or agent.

§ 169. Prohibition of offsets (88 Stat. 1515; 15 U.S.C. 1666h).

(a) A card issuer may not take any action to offset a cardholder's indebtedness arising in connection with a consumer credit transaction under the relevant credit card plan against funds of the cardholder held on deposit with the card issuer unless—

(1) such action was previously authorized in writing by the cardholder in accordance with a credit plan whereby the cardholder agrees periodically to pay debts incurred in his open end credit account by permitting the card issuer periodically to deduct all or a portion of such debt from the cardholder's deposit account, and

(2) such action with respect to any outstanding disputed amount not be taken by the card issuer upon request of the cardholder.

In the case of any credit card account in existence on the effective date of this section, the previous written authorization referred to in clause (1) shall not be requred until the date (after such effective date) when such account is renewed, but in no case later than one year after such effective date. Such written authorization shall be deemed to exist if the card issuer has previously notified the cardholder that the use of his credit card account will subject any funds which the card issuer holds in deposit accounts of such cardholder to offset against any amounts due and payable on his credit card account which have not been paid in accordance with the terms of the agreement between the card issuer and the cardholder.

(b) This section does not alter or affect the right under State law of a card issuer to attach or otherwise levy upon funds of a cardholder held on deposit with the card issuer if that remedy is constitutionally available to creditors generally.

§ 170. Rights of credit card customers (88 Stat. 1515; 15 U.S.C. 1666i).

(a) Subject to the limitation contained in subsection (b), a card issuer who has issued a credit card to a cardholder pursuant to an open end consumer credit plan shall be subject to all claims (other than tort claims) and defenses arising out of any transaction in which the credit card is used as a method of payment or extension of credit if (1) the obligor has made a good faith attempt to obtain satisfactory resolution of a disagreement or problem relative to the transaction from the person honoring the credit card; (2) the amount of the initial transaction exceeds $50; and (3) the place where the initial transaction occurred was in the same State as the mailing address previously provided by the cardholder or was within 100 miles from such address, except that the limitations set forth in clauses (2) and (3) with respect to an obligor's right to assert claims and defenses against a card issuer shall not be applicable to any transaction in which the person honoring the credit card (A) is the same person as the card issuer, (B) is controlled by the card issuer, (C) is under direct or indirect common control with the card issuer, (D) is a franchised dealer in the card issuer's products or services, or (E) has obtained the order for such transaction through a mail solicitation made by or participated in by the card issuer in which the cardholder is solicited to enter into such transaction by using the credit card issued by the card issuer.

(b) The amount of claims or defenses asserted by the cardholder may not exceed the amount of credit outstanding with respect to such transaction at the time the cardholder first notifies the card issuer or the person honoring the credit card of such claim or defense. For the purpose of determining the amount of credit outstanding in the preceding sentence, payments and credits to the cardholder's account are deemed to have been applied, in the order indicated, to the payment of: (1) late charges in the order of their entry to the account; (2) finance charges in order of their entry to the account; and (3) debits to the account other than those set forth above, in the order in which each debit entry to the account was made.

§ 171. Relation to State laws (88 Stat. 1516; 90 Stat. 198; 15 U.S.C. 1666j).

(a) This chapter does not annul, alter, or affect, or exempt any person subject to the provisions of this chapter from complying with, the laws of any State with respect to credit billing practices, except to the extent that those laws are inconsistent with any provision of this chapter, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency. The Board is authorized to determine whether such inconsistencies exist. The Board may not determine that any State law is inconsistent with any provision of this chapter if the Board determines that such law gives greater protection to the consumer.

(b) The Board shall by regulation exempt from the requirements of this chapter any class of credit transactions within any State if it determines that under the law of that State that class of transactions is subject to requirements substantially similar to those imposed under this chapter or that such law gives greater protection to the consumer, and that there is adequate provision for enforcement.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this title, any discount offered under section 167(b) of this title shall not be considered a finance charge or other charge for credit under the usury laws of any State or under the laws of any State relating to disclosure of information in connection with credit transactions, or relating to the types, amounts or rates of charges, or to any element or elements of charges permissible under such laws in connection with the extension or use of credit.

CHAPTER 5—CONSUMER LEASES

§ 181. Definitions (90 Stat. 257; 15 U.S.C. 1667).

For purposes of this chapter—

(1) The term "consumer lease" means a contract in the form of a lease or bailment for the use of personal property by a natural person for a period of time exceeding four months, and for a total contractual obligation not exceeding $25,000, primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, whether or not the lessee has the option to purchase or otherwise become the owner of the property at the expiration of the lease, except that such term shall not include any credit sale as defined in section 103(g). Such term does not include a lease for agricultural, business, or commercial purposes, or to a government or governmental agency or instrumentality, or to an organization.

(2) The term "lessee" means a natural person who leases or is offered a consumer lease.

(3) The term "lessor" means a person who is regularly engaged in leasing, offering to lease, or arranging to lease under a consumer lease.

(4) The term "personal property" means any property which is not real property under the laws of the State where situated at the time offered or otherwise made available for lease.

(5) The terms "security" and "security interest" mean any interest in property which secures payment or performance of an obligation.

§ 182. Consumer lease disclosures (90 Stat. 258; 15 U.S.C. 1667a).

Each lessor shall give a lessee prior to the consummation of the lease a dated written statement on which the lessor and lessee are identified setting out accurately and in a clear and conspicuous manner the following information with respect to that lease, as applicable:

(1) A brief description or identification of the leased property;

(2) The amount of any payment by the lessee required at the inception of the lease;

(3) The amount paid or payable by the lessee for official fees, registration, certificate of title, or license fees or taxes;

(4) The amount of other charges payable by the lessee not included in the periodic payments, a description of the charges and that the lessee shall be liable for the differential, if any, between the anticipated fair market value of the leased property and its appraised actual value at the termination of the lease, if the lessee has such liability;

(5) A statement of the amount or method of determining the amount of any liabilities the lease imposes upon the lessee at the end of the term and whether or not the lessee has the option to purchase the leased property and at what price and time;

(6) A statement identifying all express warranties and guarantees made by the manufacturer or lessor with respect to the leased property, and identifying the party responsible for maintaining or servicing the leased property together with a description of the responsibility;

(7) A brief description of insurance provided or paid for by the lessor or required of the lessee, including the types and amounts of the coverages and costs;

(8) A description of any security interest held or to be retained by the lessor in connection with the lease and a clear identification of the property to which the security interest relates;

(9) The number, amount, and due dates or periods of payments under the lease and the total amount of such periodic payments;

(10) Where the lease provides that the lessee shall be liable for the anticipated fair market value of the property on expiration of the lease, the fair market value of the property at the inception of the lease, the aggregate cost of the lease on expiration, and the differential between them; and

(11) A statement of the conditions under which the lessee or lessor may terminate the lease prior to the end of the term and the amount or method of determining any penalty or other charge for delinquency, default, late payments, or early termination.

Disclosures in lease contract; estimates.

The disclosures required under this section may be made in the lease contract to be signed by the lessee. The Board may provide by regulation that any portion of the information required to be disclosed under this section may be given in the form of estimates where the lessor is not in a position to know exact information.

§ 183. Lessee's liability on expiration or termination of lease (90 Stat. 259; 15 U.S.C. 1667b).

(a) Where the lessee's liability on expiration of a consumer lease is based on the estimated residual value of the property such estimated residual value shall be a reasonable approximation of the anticipated actual fair market value of the property on lease expiration. There shall be a rebuttable presumption that the estimated residual value is unreasonable to the extent that the estimated residual value exceeds the actual residual value by more than three times the average payment allocable to a monthly period under the lease. In addition, where the lessee has such liability on expiration of a consumer lease there shall be a rebuttable presumption that the lessor's estimated residual value is not in good faith to the extent that the estimated residual value exceeds the actual residual value by more than three times the average payment allocable to a monthly period under the lease and such lessor shall not collect from the lessee the amount of such excess liability on expiration of a consumer lease unless the lessor brings a successful action with respect to such excess liability. In all actions, the lessor shall pay the lessee's reasonable attorney's fees. The presumptions stated in this section shall not apply to the extent the excess of estimated over actual residual value is due to physical damage to the property beyond reasonable wear and use, or to excessive use, and the lease may set standards for such wear and use if such standards are not unreasonable. Nothing in this subsection shall preclude the right of a willing lessee to make any mutually agreeable final adjustment with respect to such excess residual liability, provided such an agreement is reached after termination of the lease.

Estimated residual value not in good faith.

Attorney's fees.

Penalties.

(b) Penalties or other charges for delinquency, default, or early termination may be specified in the lease but only at an amount which is reasonable in the light of the anticipated or actual harm caused by the delinquency, default, or early termination, the difficulties of proof of loss, and the inconvenience or nonfeasibility of otherwise obtaining an adequate remedy.

Third party appraisal.

(c) If a lease has a residual value provision at the termination of the lease, the lessee may obtain at his expense, a professional appraisal of the leased property by an independent third party agreed to by both parties. Such appraisal shall be final and binding on the parties.

§ 184. Consumer lease advertising (90 Stat. 259; 15 U.S.C. 1667c).

Required disclosures in advertising.

(a) No advertisement to aid, promote, or assist directly or indirectly any consumer lease shall state the amount of any payment, the number of required payments, or that any or no downpayment or other payment is required at inception of the lease unless the advertisement also states clearly and conspicuously and in accordance with regulations issued by the Board each of the following items of information which is applicable:

(1) That the transaction advertised is a lease.

(2) The amount of any payment required at the inception of the lease or that no such payment is required if that is the case.

(3) The number, amounts, due dates or periods of scheduled payments, and the total of payments under the lease.

(4) That the lessee shall be liable for the differential, if any, between the anticipated fair market value of the leased property and its appraised actual value at the termination of the lease, if the lessee has such liability.

(5) A statement of the amount or method of determining the amount of any liabilities the lease imposes upon the lessee at the end of the term and whether or not the lessee has the option to purchase the leased property and at what price and time.

Media not liable.

(b) There is no liability under this section on the part of any owner or personnel, as such, of any medium in which an advertisement appears or through which it is disseminated.

§ 185. Civil liability (90 Stat. 260; 15 U.S.C. 1667d).

(a) Any lessor who fails to comply with any requirement imposed under section 182 or 183 of this chapter with respect to any person is liable to such person as provided in section 130.

(b) Any lessor who fails to comply with any requirement imposed under section 184 of this chapter with respect to any person who suffers actual damage from the violation is liable to such person as provided in section 130. For the purposes of this section, the term "creditor" as used in sections 115, 130, and 131 shall include a lessor as defined in this chapter.

"Creditor."

(c) Notwithstanding section 130(e), any action under this section may be brought in any United States district court or in any other court of competent jurisdiction. Such actions alleging a failure to disclose or otherwise comply with the requirements of this chapter shall be brought within one year of the termination of the lease agreement.

§ 186. Relation to State laws (90 Stat. 260; 15 U.S.C. 1667e).

(a) This chapter does not annul, alter, or affect, or exempt any person subject to the provisions of this chapter from complying with, the laws of any State with respect to consumer leases, except to the extent that those laws are inconsistent with any provision of this chapter, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency. The Board is authorized to determine whether such inconsistencies exist. The Board may not determine that any State law is inconsistent with any provision of this chapter if the Board determines that such law gives greater protection and benefit to the consumer.

(b) The Board shall by regulation exempt from the requirements of this chapter any class of lease transactions within any State if it determines that under the law of that State that class of transactions is subject to requirements substantially similar to those imposed under this chapter or that such law gives greater protection and benefit to the consumer, and that there is adequate provision for enforcement.

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISIONS

§ 501. Severability (82 Stat. 167; 15 U.S.C. 1601 note).

If a provision enacted by this Act is held invalid, all valid provisions that are severable from the invalid provision remain in effect. If a provision enacted by this Act is held invalid in one or more of its applications, the provision remains in effect in all valid applications that are severable from the invalid application or applications.

§ 502. Captions and catchlines for reference only (82 Stat. 167; 15 U.S.C. 1601 note).

Captions and catchlines are intended solely as aids to convenient reference, and no inference as to the legislative intent with respect to any provision enacted by this Act may be drawn from them.

§ 503. Grammatical usages (82 Stat. 167; 15 U.S.C. 1601 note).

In this Act:

(1) The word "may" is used to indicate that an action either is authorized or is permitted.

(2) The word "shall" is used to indicate that an action is both authorized and required.

(3) The phrase "may not" is used to indicate that an action is both unauthorized and forbidden.

(4) Rules of law are stated in the indicative mood.

§ 504. Effective dates (82 Stat. 167; 15 U.S.C. 1601 note; 84 Stat. 1128; 15 U.S.C. 1681 note).

(a) Except as otherwise specified, the provisions of this Act take effect upon enactment.

(b) Chapters 2 and 3 of title I take effect on July 1, 1969.

(c) Title III takes effect on July 1, 1970.

(d) Title VI takes effect on April 24, 1971.

TITLE VI—CONSUMER CREDIT REPORTING

§ 601. Short title (84 Stat. 1128).

This title may be cited as the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

§ 602. Findings and purpose (84 Stat. 1128; 15 U.S.C. 1681).

(a) The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The banking system is dependent upon fair and accurate credit reporting. Inaccurate credit reports directly impair the efficiency of the banking system, and unfair credit reporting methods undermine the public confidence which is essential to the continued functioning of the banking system.

(2) An elaborate mechanism has been developed for investigating and evaluating the credit worthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, and general reputation of consumers.

(3) Consumer reporting agencies have assumed a vital role in assembling and evaluating consumer credit and other information on consumers.

(4) There is a need to insure that consumer reporting agencies exercise their grave responsibilities with fairness, impartiality, and a respect for the consumer's right to privacy.

(b) It is the purpose of this title to require that consumer reporting agencies adopt reasonable procedures for meeting the needs of commerce for consumer credit, personnel, insurance, and other information in a manner which is fair and equitable to the consumer, with regard to the confidentiality, accuracy, relevancy, and proper utilization of such information in accordance with the requirements of this title.

§ 603. Definitions and rules of construction (84 Stat. 1128; 15 U.S.C. 1681a).

(a) Definitions and rules of construction set forth in this section are applicable for the purposes of this title.

(b) The term "person" means any individual, partnership, corporation, trust, estate, cooperative, association, government or governmental subdivision or agency, or other entity.

(c) The term "consumer" means an individual.

(d) The term "consumer report" means any written, oral, or other communication of any information by a consumer reporting agency bearing on a consumer's credit worthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living which is used or expected to be used or collected in whole or in part for the purpose of serving as a factor in establishing the consumer's eligibility for (1) credit or insurance to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, or (2) employment purposes, or (3) other purposes authorized under section 604. The term does not include (A) any report containing information solely as to transactions or experiences between the consumer and the person making the report; (B) any authorization or approval of a specific extension of credit directly or indirectly by the issuer of a credit card or similar device; or (C) any report in which a person who has been requested by a third party to make a specific extension of credit directly or indirectly to a consumer conveys his decision with respect to such request, if the third party advises the consumer of the name and address of the person to whom the request was made and such person makes the disclosures to the consumer required under section 615.

(e) The term "investigative consumer report" means a consumer report or portion thereof in which information on a consumer's character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living is obtained through personal interviews with neighbors, friends, or associates of the consumer reported on or with others with whom he is acquainted or who may have knowledge concerning any such items of information. However, such information shall not include specific factual information on a consumer's credit record obtained directly from a creditor of the consumer or from a consumer reporting agency when such information was obtained directly from a creditor of the consumer or from the consumer.

(f) The term "consumer reporting agency" means any person which, for monetary fees, dues, or on a cooperative nonprofit basis, regularly engages in whole or in part in the practice of assembling or evaluating consumer credit information or other information on consumers for the purpose of furnishing consumer reports to third parties, and which uses any means or facility of interstate commerce for the purpose of preparing or furnishing consumer reports.

(g) The term "file", when used in connection with information on any consumer, means all of the information on that consumer recorded and retained by a consumer reporting agency regardless of how the information is stored.

(h) The term "employment purposes" when used in connection with a consumer report means a report used for the purpose of evaluating a consumer for employment, promotion, reassignment or retention as an employee.

(i) The term "medical information" means information or records obtained, with the consent of the individual to whom it relates, from licensed physicians or medical practitioners, hospitals, clinics, or other medical or medically related facilities.

§ 604. Permissible purposes of reports (84 Stat. 1129; 15 U.S.C. 1681b).

A consumer reporting agency may furnish a consumer report under the following circumstances and no other:

(1) In response to the order of a court having jurisdiction to issue such an order.

(2) In accordance with the written instructions of the consumer to whom it relates.

(3) to a person which it has reason to believe—

(A) intends to use the information in connection with a credit transaction involving the consumer on whom the information is to be furnished and involving the extension of credit to, or review or collection of an account of, the consumer; or

(B) intends to use the information for employment purposes; or

(C) intends to use the information in connection with the underwriting of insurance involving the consumer; or

(D) intends to use the information in connection with a determination of the consumer's eligibility for a license or other benefit granted by a governmental instrumentality required by law to consider an applicant's financial responsibility or status; or

(E) otherwise has a legitimate business need for the information in connection with a business transaction involving the consumer.

§ 605. Obsolete information (84 Stat. 1129; 15 U.S.C. 1681c).

(a) Except as authorized under subsection (b), no consumer reporting agency may make any consumer report containing any of the following items of information:

(1) Bankruptcies which, from date of adjudication of the most recent bankruptcy, antedate the report by more than fourteen years.

(2) Suits and judgments which, from date of entry, antedate the report by more than seven years or until the governing statute of limitations has expired, whichever is the longer period.

(3) Paid tax liens which, from date of payment, antedate the report by more than seven years.

(4) Accounts placed for collection or charged to profit and loss which antedate the report by more than seven years.

(5) Records of arrest, indictment, or conviction of crime which, from date of disposition, release, or parole, antedate the report by more than seven years.

(6) Any other adverse item of information which antedates the report by more than seven years.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) are not applicable in the case of any consumer credit report to be used in connection with—

(1) a credit transaction involving, or which may reasonably be expected to involve, a principal amount of $50,000 or more;

(2) the underwriting of life insurance involving, or which may reasonably be expected to involve, a face amount of $50,000 or more; or

(3) the employment of any individual at an annual salary which equals, or which may reasonably be expected to equal $20,000, or more.

§ 606. Disclosure of investigative consumer reports (84 Stat. 1130; 15 U.S.C. 1681d).

(a) A person may not procure or cause to be prepared an investigative consumer report on any consumer unless—

(1) it is clearly and accurately disclosed to the consumer that an investigative consumer report including information as to his character, general reputation, personal characteristics, and mode of living, whichever are applicable, may be made, and such disclosure (A) is made in a writing mailed, or otherwise delivered, to the consumer, not later than three days after the date on which the report was first requested, and (B) includes a statement informing the consumer of his right to request the additional disclosures provided for under subsection (b) of this section; or

(2) the report is to be used for employment purposes for which the consumer has not specifically applied.

(b) Any person who procures or causes to be prepared an investigative consumer report on any consumer shall, upon written request made by the consumer within a reasonable period of time after the receipt by him of the disclosure required by subsection (a)(1), shall make a complete and accurate disclosure of the nature and scope of the investigation requested. This disclosure shall be made in a writing mailed, or otherwise delivered, to the consumer not later than five days after the date on which the request for such disclosure was received from the consumer or such report was first requested, whichever is the later.

(c) No person may be held liable for any violation of subsection (a) or (b) of this section if he shows by a preponderance of the evidence that at the time of the violation he maintained reasonable procedures to assure compliance with subsection (a) or (b).

§ 607. Compliance procedures (84 Stat. 1130; 15 U.S.C. 1681e).

(a) Every consumer reporting agency shall maintain reasonable procedures designed to avoid violations of section 605 and to limit the furnishing of consumer reports to the purposes listed under section 604. These procedures shall require that prospective users of the information identify themselves, certify the purposes for which the information is sought, and certify that the information will be used for no other purpose. Every consumer reporting agency shall make a reasonable effort to verify the identity of a new prospective user and the uses certified by such prospective user prior to furnishing such user a consumer report. No consumer reporting agency may furnish a consumer report to any person if it has reasonable grounds for believing that the consumer report will not be used for a purpose listed in section 604.

(b) Whenever a consumer reporting agency prepares a consumer report it shall follow reasonable procedures to assure maximum possible accuracy of the information concerning the individual about whom the report relates.

§ 608. Disclosures to governmental agencies (84 Stat. 1131; 15 U.S.C. 1681f).

Notwithstanding the provisions of section 604, a consumer reporting agency may furnish identifying information respecting any consumer, limited to his name, address, former address, place of employment, or former places of employment, to a governmental agency.

§ 609. Disclosures to consumers (84 Stat. 1131; 15 U.S.C. 1681g).

(a) Every consumer reporting agency shall, upon request and proper identification of any consumer, clearly and accurately disclose to the consumer:

(1) The nature and substance of all information (except medical information) in its files on the consumer at the time of the request.

(2) The sources of the information; except that the sources of information acquired solely for use in preparing an investigative consumer report and actually used for no other purpose need not be disclosed: Provided, That in the event an action is brought under this title, such sources shall be available to the plaintiff under appropriate discovery procedures in the court in which the action is brought.

(3) The recipients of any consumer report on the consumer which it has furnished—

(A) for employment purposes within the two-year period preceding the request, and

(B) for any other purpose within the six-month period preceding the request.

(b) The requirements of subsection (a) respecting the disclosure of sources of information and the recipients of consumer reports do not apply to information received or consumer reports furnished prior to the effective date of this title except to the extent that the matter involved is contained in the files of the consumer reporting agency on that date.

§ 610. Conditions of disclosure to consumers (84 Stat. 1131; 15 U.S.C. 1681h).

Times and notice.

(a) A consumer reporting agency shall make the disclosures required under section 609 during normal business hours and on reasonable notice.

Consumer identification.

(b) The disclosures required under section 609 shall be made to the consumer

(1) in person if he appears in person and furnishes proper identification; or

(2) by telephone if he has made a written request, with proper identification, for telephone disclosure and the toll charge, if any, for the telephone call is prepaid by or charged directly to the consumer.

Trained personnel.

(c) Any consumer reporting agency shall provide trained personnel to explain to the consumer any information furnished to him pursuant to section 609.

Person accompanying consumer.

(d) The consumer shall be permitted to be accompanied by one other person of his choosing, who shall furnish reasonable identification. A consumer reporting agency may require the consumer to furnish a written statement granting permission to the consumer reporting agency to discuss the consumer's file in such person's presence.

Limited liability.

(e) Except as provided in sections 616 and 617, no consumer may bring any action or proceeding in the nature of defamation, invasion of privacy, or negligence with respect to the reporting of information against any consumer reporting agency, any user of information, or any person who furnishes information to a consumer reporting agency, based on information disclosed pursuant to section 609, 610, or 615, except as to false information furnished with malice or willful intent to injure such consumer.

§ 611. Procedure in case of disputed accuracy (84 Stat. 1132; 15 U.S.C. 1681i).

Dispute; reinvestigation.

(a) If the completeness or accuracy of any item of information contained in his file is disputed by a consumer, and such dispute is directly conveyed to the consumer reporting agency by the consumer, the consumer reporting agency shall within a reasonable period of time reinvestigate and record the current status of that information unless it has reasonable grounds to believe that the dispute by the consumer is frivolous or irrelevant. If after such reinvestigation such information is found to be inaccurate or can no longer be verified, the consumer reporting agency shall promptly delete such information. The presence of contradictory information in the consumer's file does not in and of itself constitute reasonable grounds for believing the dispute is frivolous or irrelevant.

Statement of dispute.

(b) If the reinvestigation does not resolve the dispute, the consumer may file a brief statement setting forth the nature of the dispute. The consumer reporting agency may limit such statements to not more than one hundred words if it provides the consumer with assistance in writing a clear summary of the dispute.

Subsequent consumer reports.

(c) Whenever a statement of a dispute is filed, unless there is reasonable grounds to believe that it is frivolous or irrevelant, the consumer reporting agency shall, in any subsequent consumer report containing the information in question, clearly note that it is disputed by the consumer and provide either the consumer's statement or a clear and accurate codification or summary thereof.

(d) Following any deletion of information which is found to be inaccurate or whose accuracy can no longer be verified or any notation as to disputed information, the consumer reporting agency shall, at the request of the consumer, furnish notification that the item has been deleted or the statement, codification or summary pursuant to subsection (b) or (c) to any person specifically designated by the consumer who has within two years prior thereto received a consumer report for employment purposes, or within six months prior thereto received a consumer report for any other purpose, which contained the deleted or disputed information. The consumer reporting agency shall clearly and conspicuously disclose to the consumer his rights to make such a request. Such disclosure shall be made at or prior to the time the information is deleted or the consumer's statement regarding the disputed information is received.

§ 612. Charges for certain disclosures (84 Stat. 1132; 15 U.S.C. 1681j).

A consumer reporting agency shall make all disclosures pursuant to section 609 and furnish all consumer reports pursuant to section 611(d) without charge to the consumer if, within thirty days after receipt by such consumer of a notification pursuant to section 615 or notification from a debt collection agency affiliated with such consumer reporting agency stating that the consumer's credit rating may be or has been adversely affected, the consumer makes a request under section 609 or 611(d). Otherwise, the consumer reporting agency may impose a reasonable charge on the consumer for making disclosure to such consumer pursuant to section 609, the charge for which shall be indicated to the consumer prior to making disclosure; and for furnishing notifications, statements, summaries, or codifications to person designated by the consumer pursuant to section 611(d), the charge for which shall be indicated to the consumer prior to furnishing such information and shall not exceed the charge that the consumer reporting agency would impose on each designated recipient for a consumer report except that no charge may be made for notifying such persons of the deletion of information which is found to be inaccurate or which can no longer be verified.

§ 613. Public record information for employment purposes (84 Stat. 1133; 15 U.S.C. 1681k).

A consumer reporting agency which furnishes a consumer report for employment purposes and which for that purpose compiles and reports items of information on consumers which are matters of public record and are likely to have an adverse effect upon a consumer's ability to obtain employment shall—

(1) at the time such public record information is reported to the user of such consumer report, notify the consumer of the fact that public record information is being reported by the consumer reporting agency, together with the name and address of the person to whom such information is being reported; or

(2) maintain strict procedures designated to insure that whenever public record information which is likely to have an adverse effect on a consumer's ability to obtain employment is reported it is complete and up to date. For purposes of this paragraph, items of public record relating to arrests, indictments, convictions, suits, tax liens, and outstanding judgments shall be considered up to date if the current public record status of the item at the time of the report is reported.

§ 614. Restrictions on investigative consumer reports (84 Stat. 1133; 15 U.S.C. 1681l).

Whenever a consumer reporting agency prepares an investigative consumer report, no adverse information in the consumer report (other than information which is a matter of public record) may be included in a subsequent consumer report unless such adverse information has been verified in the process of making such subsequent consumer report, or the adverse information was received within the three-month period preceding the date the subsequent report is furnished.

§ 615. Requirements on users of consumer reports (84 Stat. 1133; 15 U.S.C. 1681m).

Adverse action based on report of reporting agency.

(a) Whenever credit or insurance for personal, family, or household purposes, or employment involving a consumer is denied or the charge for such credit or insurance is increased either wholly or partly because of information contained in a consumer report from a consumer reporting agency, the user of the consumer report shall so advise the consumer against whom such adverse action has been taken and supply the name and address of the consumer reporting agency making the report.

Adverse action based on reports other than reporting agency.

(b) Whenever credit for personal, family, or household purposes involving a consumer is denied or the charge for such credit is increased either wholly or partly because of information obtained from a person other than a consumer reporting agency bearing upon the consumer's credit worthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living, the user of such information shall, within a reasonable period of time, upon the consumer's written request for the reasons for such adverse action received within sixty days after learning of such adverse action, disclose the nature of the information to the consumer. The user of such information shall clearly and accurately disclose to the consumer his right to make such written request at the time such adverse action is communicated to the consumer.

Reasonable procedures for compliance.

(c) No person shall be held liable for any violation of this section if he shows by a preponderance of the evidence that at the time of the alleged violation he maintained reasonable procedures to assure compliance with the provisions of subsections (a) and (b).

§ 616. Civil liability for willful noncompliance (84 Stat. 1134; 15 U.S.C. 1681n).

Any consumer reporting agency or user of information which willfully fails to comply with any requirement imposed under this title with respect to any consumer is liable to that consumer in an amount equal to the sum of—

(1) any actual damages sustained by the consumer as a result of the failure;

(2) such amount of punitive damages as the court may allow; and

(3) in the case of any successful action to enforce any liability under this section, the costs of the action together with reasonable attorney's fees as determined by the court.

§ 617. Civil liability for negligent noncompliance (84 Stat. 1134; 15 U.S.C. 1681o).

Any consumer reporting agency or user of information which is negligent in failing to comply with any requirement imposed under this title with respect to any consumer is liable to that consumer in an amount equal to the sum of—

(1) any actual damages sustained by the consumer as a result of the failure;

(2) in the case of any successful action to enforce any liability under this section, the costs of the action together with reasonable attorney's fees as determined by the court.

§ 618. Jurisdiction of courts; limitation of actions (84 Stat. 1134; 15 U.S.C. 1681p).

An action to enforce any liability created under this title may be brought in any appropriate United States district court without regard to the amount in controversy, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction, within two years from the date on which the liability arises, except that where a defendant has materially and willfully misrepresented any information required under this title to be disclosed to an individual and the information so misrepresented is material to the establishment of the defendant's liability to that individual under this title, the action may be brought at any time within two years after discovery by the individual of the misrepresentation.

§ 619. Obtaining information under false pretenses (84 Stat. 1134; 15 U.S.C. 1681q).

Any person who knowingly and willfully obtains information on a consumer from a consumer reporting agency under false pretenses shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 620. Unauthorized disclosures by officers or employees (84 Stat. 1134; 15 U.S.C. 1681r).

Any officer or employee of a consumer reporting agency who knowingly and willfully provides information concerning an individual from the agency's files to a person not authorized to receive that information shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

§ 621. Administrative enforcement (84 Stat. 1134; 15 U.S.C. 1681s).

Federal Trade Commission; powers.

(a) Compliance with the requirements imposed under this title shall be enforced under the Federal Trade Commission Act by the Federal Trade Commission with respect to consumer reporting agencies and all other persons subject thereto, except to the extent that enforcement of the requirements imposed under this title is specifically committed to some other government agency under subsection (b) hereof. For the purpose of the exercise by the Federal Trade Commission of its functions and powers under the Federal Trade Commission Act, a violation of any requirement or prohibition imposed under this title shall constitute an unfair or deceptive act or practice in commerce in violation of section

5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act and shall be subject to enforcement by the Federal Trade Commission under section 5(b) thereof with respect to any consumer reporting agency or person subject to enforcement by the Federal Trade Commission pursuant to this subsection, irrespective of whether that person is engaged in commerce or meets any other jurisdictional tests in the Federal Trade Commission Act. The Federal Trade Commission shall have such procedural, investigative, and enforcement powers, including the power to issue procedural rules in enforcing compliance with the requirements imposed under this title and to require the filing of reports, the production of documents, and the appearance of witnesses as though the applicable terms and conditions of the Federal Trade Commission Act were part of this title. Any person violating any of the provisions of this title shall be subject to the penalties and entitled to the privileges and immunities provided in the Federal Trade Commission Act as though the applicable terms and provisions thereof were part of this title.

(b) Compliance with the requirements imposed under this title with respect to consumer reporting agencies and persons who use consumer reports from such agencies shall be enforced under—

Other administrative bodies.

(1) section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, in the case of:

(A) national banks, by the Comptroller of the Currency;

(B) member banks of the Federal Reserve System (other than national banks), by the Federal Reserve Board; and

(C) banks insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (other than members of the Federal Reserve System), by the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

(2) section 5 (d) of the Home Owners Loan Act of 1933, section 407 of the National Housing Act, and sections 6 (i) and 17 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (acting directly or through the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation), in the case of any institution subject to any of those provisions;

(3) the Federal Credit Union Act, by the Administrator of the National Credit Union Administration with respect to any Federal credit union;

(4) the Acts to regulate commerce, by the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to any common carrier subject to those Acts;

(5) the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, by the Civil Aeronautics Board with respect to any air carrier or foreign air carrier subject to that Act; and

(6) the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (except as provided in section 406 of that Act), by the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to any activities subject to that Act.

Other authority.

(c) For the purpose of the exercise by any agency referred to in subsection (b) of its powers under any Act referred to in that subsection, a violation of any requirement imposed under this title shall be deemed to be a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act. In addition to its powers under any provision of law specifically referred to in subsection (b), each of the agencies referred to in that subsection may exercise, for the purpose of enforcing compliance with any requirement imposed under this title any other authority conferred on it by law.

§ 622. Relation to State laws (84 Stat. 1136; 15 U.S.C. 1681t).

This title does not annul, alter, affect, or exempt any person subject to the provisions of this title from complying with the laws of any State with respect to the collection, distribution, or use of any information on consumers, except to the extent that those laws are inconsistent with any provision of this title, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency.

TITLE VII—EQUAL CREDIT OPPORTUNITY

§ 701. Prohibited discrimination; reasons for adverse action (88 Stat. 1521; 90 Stat. 251; 15 U.S.C. 1691).

(a) It shall be unlawful for any creditor to discriminate against any applicant, with respect to any aspect of a credit transaction—

(1) on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex or marital status, or age (provided the applicant has the capacity to contract);

(2) because all or part of the applicant's income derives from any public assistance program; or

(3) because the applicant has in good faith exercised any right under the Consumer Credit Protection Act.

(b) It shall not constitute discrimination for purposes of this title for a creditor—

(1) to make an inquiry of marital status if such inquiry is for the purpose of ascertaining the creditor's rights and remedies applicable to the particular extension of credit and not to discriminate in a determination of credit-worthiness;

(2) to make an inquiry of the applicant's age or of whether the applicant's income derives from any public assistance program if such inquiry is for the purpose of determining the amount and probable continuance of income levels, credit history, or other pertinent element of credit-worthiness as provided in regulations of the Board;

(3) to use any empirically derived credit system which considers age if such system is demonstrably and statistically sound in accordance with regulations of the Board, except that in the operation of such system the age of an elderly applicant may not be assigned a negative factor or value; or

(4) to make an inquiry or to consider the age of an elderly applicant when the age of such applicant is to be used by the creditor in the extension of credit in favor of such applicant.

(c) It is not a violation of this section for a creditor to refuse to extend credit offered pursuant to—

(1) any credit assistance program expressly authorized by law for an economically disadvantaged class of persons;

(2) any credit assistance program administered by a nonprofit organization for its members or an economically disadvantaged class of persons; or

(3) any special purpose credit program offered by a profitmaking organization to meet special social needs which meets standards prescribed in regulations by the Board;

if such refusal is required by or made pursuant to such program.

Notice.

(d) (1) Within thirty days (or such longer reasonable time as specified in regulations of the Board for any class of credit transaction) after receipt of a completed application for credit, a creditor shall notify the applicant of its action on the application.

Statement of reasons.

(2) Each applicant against whom adverse action is taken shall be entitled to a statement of reasons for such action from the creditor. A creditor satisfies this obligation by—

(A) providing statements of reasons in writing as a matter of course to applicants against whom adverse action is taken; or

"Adverse action."

(B) giving written notification of adverse action which discloses (i) the applicant's right to a statement of reasons within thirty days after receipt by the creditor of a request made within sixty days after such notification, and (ii) the identity of the person or office from which such statement may be obtained. Such statement may be given orally if the written notification advises the applicant of his right to have the statement of reasons confirmed in writing on written request.

(3) A statement of reasons meets the requirements of this section only if it contains the specific reasons for the adverse action taken.

(4) Where a creditor has been requested by a third party to make a specific extension of credit directly or indirectly to an applicant, the notification and statement of reasons required by this subsection may be made directly by such creditor, or indirectly through the third party, provided in either case that the identity of the creditor is disclosed.

(5) The requirements of paragraph (2), (3), or (4) may be satisfied by verbal statements or notifications in the case of any creditor who did not act on more than one hundred and fifty applications during the calendar year preceding the calendar year in which the adverse action is taken, as determined under regulations of the Board.

"Adverse action."

(6) For purposes of this subsection, the term "adverse action" means a denial or revocation of credit, a change in the terms of an existing credit arrangement, or a refusal to grant credit in substantially the amount or on substantially the terms requested. Such term does not include a refusal to extend additional credit under an existing credit arrangement where the applicant is delinquent or otherwise in default, or where such additional credit would exceed a previously established credit limit.

§ 702. Definitions (88 Stat. 1522; 15 U.S.C. 1691a).

(a) The definitions and rules of construction set forth in this section are applicable for the purposes of this title.

(b) The term "applicant" means any person who applies to a creditor directly for an extension, renewal, or continuation of credit, or applies to a creditor indirectly by use of an existing credit plan for an amount exceeding a previously established credit limit.

(c) The term "Board" refers to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

(d) The term "credit" means the right granted by a creditor to a debtor to defer payment of debt or to incur debts and defer its payment or to purchase property or services and defer payment therefor.

(e) The term "creditor" means any person who regularly extends, renews, or continues credit; any person who regularly arranges for the extension, renewal, or continuation of credit; or any assignee of an original creditor who participates in the decision to extend, renew, or continue credit.

(f) The term "person" means a natural person, a corporation, government or governmental subdivision or agency, trust, estate, partnership, cooperative, or association.

(g) Any reference to any requirement imposed under this title or any provision thereof includes reference to the regulations of the Board under this title or the provision thereof in question.

§ 703. Regulations (88 Stat. 1522; 90 Stat. 252; 15 U.S.C. 1691b).

(a) The Board shall prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of this title. These regulations may contain but are not limited to such classifications, differentiation, or other provision, and may provide for such adjustments and exceptions for any class of transactions, as in the judgment of the Board are necessary or proper to effectuate the purposes of this title, to prevent circumvention or evasion thereof, or to facilitate or substantiate compliance therewith. In particular, such regulations may exempt from one or more of the provisions of this title any class of transactions not primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, if the Board makes an express finding that the application of such provision or provisions would not contribute substantially to carrying out the purposes of this title. Such regulations shall be prescribed as soon as possible after the date of enactment of this Act, but in no event later than the effective date of this Act.

Consumer Advisory Council. Establishment.

(b) The Board shall establish a Consumer Advisory Council to advise and consult with it in the exercise of its functions under the Consumer Credit

Protection Act and to advise and consult with it concerning other consumer related matters it may place before the Council. In appointing the members of the Council, the Board shall seek to achieve a fair representation of the interests of creditors and consumers. The Council shall meet from time to time at the call of the Board. Members of the Council who are not regular full-time employees of the United States shall, while attending meetings of such Council, be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Board, but not exceeding $100 per day, including travel time. Such members may be allowed travel expenses, including transportation and subsistence, while away from their homes or regular place of business.

§ 704. Administrative enforcement (88 Stat. 1522; 90 Stat. 253; 15 U.S.C. 1691c).

(a) Compliance with the requirements imposed under this title shall be enforced under:

(1) Section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, in the case of—

(A) national banks, by the Comptroller of the Currency.

(B) member banks of the Federal Reserve System (other than national banks), by the Board.

(C) banks insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (other than members of the Federal Reserve System), by the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

(2) Section 5(d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, section 407 of the National Housing Act, and sections 6(i) and 17 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (acting directly or through the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation), in the case of any institution subject to any of those provisions.

(3) The Federal Credit Union Act, by the Administrator of the National Credit Union Administration with respect to any Federal Credit Union.

(4) The Acts to regulate commerce, by the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to any common carrier subject to those Acts.

(5) The Federal Aviation Act of 1958, by the Civil Aeronautics Board with respect to any air carrier or foreign air carrier subject to that Act.

(6) The Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (except as provided in section 406 of that Act), by the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to any activities subject to that Act.

(7) The Farm Credit Act of 1971, by the Farm Credit Administration with respect to any Federal land bank, Federal land bank association, Federal intermediate credit bank, and production credit association;

(8) The Securities Exchange Act of 1934, by the Securities and Exchange Commission with respect to brokers and dealers; and

(9) The Small Business Investment Act of 1958, by the Small Business Administration, with respect to small business investment companies.

(b) For the purpose of the exercise by any agency referred to in subsection (a) of its powers under any Act referred to in that subsection, a violation of any requirement imposed under this title shall be deemed to be a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act. In addition to its powers under any provision of law specifically referred to in subsection (a), each of the agencies referred to in that subsection may exercise for the purpose of enforcing compliance with any requirement imposed under this title, any other authority conferred on it by law. The exercise of the authorities of any of the agencies referred to in subsection (a) for the purpose of enforcing compliance with any requirement imposed under this title shall in no way preclude the exercise of such authorities for the purpose of enforcing compliance with any other provision of law not relating to the prohibition of discrimination on the basis of sex or marital status with respect to any aspect of a credit transaction.

(c) Except to the extent that enforcement of the requirements imposed under this title is specifically committed to some other Government agency under subsection (a), the Federal Trade Commission shall enforce such requirements. For the purpose of the exercise by the Federal Trade Commission of its functions and powers under the Federal Trade Commission Act, a violation of any requirement imposed under this title shall be deemed a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act. All of the functions and powers of the Federal Trade Commission under the Federal Trade Commission Act are available to the Commission to enforce compliance by any person with the requirements imposed under this title, irrespective of whether that person is engaged in commerce or meets any other jurisdictional tests in the Federal Trade Commission Act including the power to enforce any Federal Reserve Board regulation promulgated under this title in the same manner as if the violation had been a violation of a Federal Trade Commission trade regulation rule.

(d) The authority of the Board to issue regulations under this title does not impair the authority of any other agency designated in this section to make rules respecting its own procedures in enforcing compliance with requirements imposed under this title.

§ 705. Relation to State laws (88 Stat. 1523; 90 Stat. 253; 15 U.S.C. 1691d).

(a) A request for the signature of both parties to a marriage for the purpose of creating a valid lien, passing clear title, waiving inchoate rights to property, or assigning earnings, shall not constitute discrimination under this title: Provided, however, That this provision shall not be construed to permit a creditor to take sex or marital status into account in connection with the evaluation of creditworthiness of any applicant.

(b) Consideration or application of State property laws directly or indirectly affecting creditworthiness shall not constitute discrimination for purposes of this title.

(c) Any provision of State law which prohibits the separate extension of consumer credit to each party to a marriage shall not apply in any case where each party to a marriage voluntarily applies for separate credit from the same creditor: Provided, That in any case where such a State law is so preempted, each party to the marriage shall be solely responsible for the debt so contracted.

(d) When each party to a marriage separately and voluntarily applies for and obtains separate credit accounts with the same creditor, those accounts shall not be aggregated or otherwise combined for purposes of determining permissible finance charges or permissible loan ceilings under the laws of any State or of the United States.

(e) Where the same act or omission constitutes a violation of this title and of applicable State law, a person aggrieved by such conduct may bring a legal action to recover monetary damages either under this title or under such State law, but not both. This election of remedies shall not apply to court actions in which the relief sought does not include monetary damages or to administrative actions.

(f) This title does not annul, alter, or affect, or exempt any person subject to the provisions of this title from complying with, the laws of any State with respect to credit discrimination, except to the extent that those laws are inconsistent with any provision of this title, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency. The Board is authorized to determine whether such inconsistencies exist. The Board may not determine that any State law is inconsistent with any provision of this title if the Board determines that such law gives greater protection to the applicant.

(g) The Board shall by regulation exempt from the requirements of sections 701 and 702 of this title any class of credit transactions within any State if it determines that under the law of that

State that class of transactions is subject to requirements substantially similar to those imposed under this title or that such law gives greater protection to the applicant, and that there is adequate provision for enforcement. Failure to comply with any requirement of such State law in any transaction so exempted shall constitute a violation of this title for the purposes of section 706.

§ 706. Civil liability (88 Stat. 1524; 90 Stat. 253; 15 U.S.C. 1691e).

(a) Any creditor who fails to comply with any requirement imposed under this title shall be liable to the aggrieved applicant for any actual damages sustained by such applicant acting either in an individual capacity or as a member of a class.

(b) Any creditor, other than a government or governmental subdivision or agency, who fails to comply with any requirement imposed under this title shall be liable to the aggrieved applicant for punitive damages in an amount not greater than $10,000, in addition to any actual damages provided in subsection (a), except that in the case of a class action the total recovery under this subsection shall not exceed the lesser of $500,000 or 1 per centum of the net worth of the creditor. In determining the amount of such damages in any action, the court shall consider, among other relevant factors, the amount of any actual damages awarded, the frequency and persistence of failures of compliance by the creditor, the resources of the creditor, the number of persons adversely affected, and the extent to which the creditor's failure of compliance was intentional.

(c) Upon application by an aggrieved applicant, the appropriate United States district court or any other court of competent jurisdiction may grant such equitable and declaratory relief as is necessary to enforce the requirements imposed under this title.

(d) In the case of any successful action under subsection (a), (b), or (c), the costs of the action, together with a reasonable attorney's fee as determined by the court, shall be added to any damages awarded by the court under such subsection.

(e) No provision of this title imposing liability shall apply to any act done or omitted in good faith in conformity with any official rule, regulation, or interpretation thereof by the Board or in conformity with any interpretation or approval by an official or employee of the Federal Reserve System duly authorized by the Board to issue such interpretations or approvals under such procedures as the Board may prescribe therefor, notwithstanding that after such act or omission has occurred, such rule, regulation, interpretation, or approval is amended, rescinded, or determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.

(f) Any action under this section may be brought in the appropriate United States district court without regard to the amount in controversy, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction. No such action shall be brought later than two years from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except that—

> (1) whenever any agency having responsibility for administrative enforcement under section 704 commences an enforcement proceeding within two years from the date of the occurrence of the violation,
> (2) whenever the Attorney General commences a civil action under this section within two years from the date of the occurrence of the violation, then any applicant who has been a victim of the discrimination which is the subject of such proceeding or civil action may bring an action under this section not later than one year after the commencement of that proceeding or action.

(g) The agencies having responsibility for administrative enforcement under section 704, if unable to obtain compliance with section 701, are authorized to refer the matter to the Attorney General with a recommendation that an appropriate civil action be instituted.

(h) When a matter is referred to the Attorney General pursuant to subsection (g), or whenever he has reason to believe that one or more creditors are engaged in a pattern or practice in violation of this title, the Attorney General may bring a civil action in any appropriate United States district court for such relief as may be appropriate, including injunctive relief.

(i) No person aggrieved by a violation of this title and by a violation of section 805 of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 shall recover under this title and section 812 of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, if such violation is based on the same transaction.

(j) Nothing in this title shall be construed to prohibit the discovery of a creditor's credit granting standards under appropriate discovery procedures in the court or agency in which an action or proceeding is brought.

§ 707. Annual reports to Congress (90 Stat. 255; 15 U.S.C. 1691f).

Not later than February 1 of each year after 1976, the Board and the Attorney General shall, respectively, make reports to the Congress concerning the administration of their functions under this title, including such recommendations as the Board and the Attorney General, respectively, deem necessary or appropriate. In addition, each report of the Board shall include its assessment of the extent to which compliance with the requirements of this title is being achieved, and a summary of the enforcement actions taken by each of the agencies assigned administrative enforcement responsibilities under section 704.

§ 708. Effective date (88 Stat. 1525; 90 Stat. 255; 15 U.S.C. 1691 note).

This title takes effect upon the expiration of one year after the date of its enactment. The amendments made by the Equal Credit Opportunity Act Amendments of 1976 shall take effect on the date of enactment thereof and shall apply to any violation occurring on or after such date, except that the amendments made to section 701 of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act shall take effect 12 months after the date of enactment.

§ 709. Short title (90 Stat. 251; 15 U.S.C. 1691 note).

This title may be cited as the "Equal Credit Opportunity Act."

tions of the parties to the disputes determined by them;

(F) courts martial and military commissions;

(G) military authority exercised in the field in time of war or in occupied territory; or

(H) functions conferred by sections 1738, 1739, 1743, and 1744 of title 12; chapter 2 of title 41; or sections 1622, 1884, 1891-1902, and former section 1641(b) (2), of title 50, appendix;

(2) "person" includes an individual, partnership, corporation, association, or public or private organization other than an agency;

(3) "party" includes a person or agency named or admitted as a party, or properly seeking and entitled as of right to be admitted as a party, in an agency proceeding, and a person or agency admitted by an agency as a party for limited purposes;

(4) "rule" means the whole or a part of an agency statement of general or particular applicability and future effect designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy or describing the organization, procedure, or practice requirements of an agency and includes the approval or prescription for the future of rates, wages, corporate or financial structures or reorganizations thereof, prices, facilities, appliances, services or allowances therefor or of valuations, costs, or accounting, or practices bearing on any of the foregoing;

(5) "rule making" means agency process for formulating, amending, or repealing a rule;

(6) "order" means the whole or a part of a final disposition, whether affirmative, negative, injunctive, or declaratory in form, of an agency in a matter other than rule making but including licensing;

(7) "adjudication" means agency process for the formulation of an order;

(8) "license" includes the whole or a part of an agency permit, certificate, approval, registration, charter, membership, statutory exemption or other form of permission;

(9) "licensing" includes agency process respecting the grant, renewal, denial, revocation, suspension, annulment, withdrawal, limitation, amendment, modification, or conditioning of a license;

(10) "Sanction" includes the whole or a part of an agency—

(A) prohibition, requirement, limitation, or other condition affecting the freedom of a person;

(B) withholding of relief;

(C) imposition of penalty or fine;

(D) destruction, taking, seizure, or withholding of property;

(E) assessment of damages, reimbursement, restitution, compensation, costs, charges, or fees;

(F) requirement, revocation, or suspension of a license; or

(G) taking other compulsory or restrictive action;

(11) "relief" includes the whole or a part of an agency—

(A) grant of money, assistance, license, authority, exemption, exception, privilege, or remedy;

(B) recognition of a claim, right, immunity, privilege, exemption, or exception; or

(C) taking of other action on the application or petition of, and beneficial to, a person;

(12) "agency proceeding" means an agency process as defined by paragraphs (5), (7), and (9) of this section;

(13) "agency action" includes the whole or a part of an agency rule, order, license, sanction, relief, or the equivalent or denial thereof, or failure to act; and

(14) "ex parte communication" means an oral or written communication not on the public record with respect to which reasonable prior notice to all parties is not given, but it shall not include requests for status reports on any matter or proceeding covered by this subchapter.

PUBLIC INFORMATION; AGENCY RULES, OPINIONS, ORDERS, RECORDS, AND PROCEEDINGS (80 Stat. 383; 81 Stat. 54; 88 Stat. 1561-1564; 5 U.S.C. 552).

Sec. 552. (a) Each agency shall make available to the public information as follows:

Publication in Federal Register.

(1) Each agency shall separately state and currently publish in the Federal Register for the guidance of the public—

(A) descriptions of its central and field organization and the established places at which, the employees (and in the case of a uniformed service, the members) from whom, and the methods whereby, the public may obtain information, make submittals or requests, or obtain decisions;

(B) statements of the general course and method by which its functions are channeled and determined, including the nature and requirements of all formal and informal procedures available;

(C) rules of procedure, descriptions of forms available or the places at which forms may be obtained, and instructions as to the scope and contents of all papers, reports, or examinations;

(D) substantive rules of general applicability adopted as authorized by law, and statements of general policy or interpretations of general applicability formulated and adopted by the agency; and

(E) each amendment, revision, or repeal of the foregoing.

Except to the extent that a person has actual and timely notice of the terms thereof, a person may not in any manner be required to resort to, or be adversely affected by, a matter required to be published in the Federal Register and not so published. For the purpose of this paragraph, matter reasonably available to the class of persons affected thereby is deemed published in the Federal Register when incorporated by reference therein with the approval of the Director of the Federal Register.

Inspection and copying.

(2) Each agency, in accordance with published rules, shall make available for public inspection and copying—

(A) final opinions, including concurring and dissenting opinions, as well as orders, made in the adjudication of cases;

(B) those statements of policy and interpretations which have been adopted by the agency and are not published in the Federal Register; and

(C) administrative staff manuals and instructions to staff that affect a member of the public; unless the materials are promptly published and copies offered for sale. To the extent required to prevent a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, an agency may delete identifying details when it makes available or publishes an opinion, statement of policy, interpretation, or staff manual or instruction. However, in each case the justification for the deletion shall be explained fully in writing. Each agency shall also maintain and make available for public inspection and copying current indexes providing identifying information for the public as to any matter issued, adopted, or promulgated after July 4, 1967, and required by this paragraph to be made available or published. Each agency shall promptly publish, quarterly or more frequently, and distribute (by sale or otherwise) copies of each index or supplements thereto unless it determines by order published in the Federal Register that the publication would be unnecessary and impracticable, in which case the agency shall nonetheless provide copies of such index on request at a cost not to exceed the direct cost of duplication. A final order, opinion, statement of policy, interpretation, or staff manual or instruction that affects a member of the public may be relied on, used, or cited as precedent by an agency against a party other than an agency only if—

Indexes, publication and distribution.

Publication in Federal Register.

(i) it has been indexed and either made available or published as provided by this paragraph; or

(ii) the party has actual and timely notice of the terms thereof.

(3) Except with respect to the records made available under paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection, each agency, upon any request for records which Records, availability to public.

(A) reasonably describes such records and (B) is made in accordance with published rules stating the time, place, fees (if any), and procedures to be followed, shall make the records promptly available to any person.

Document search and duplication fees, regulations.

(4) (A) In order to carry out the provisions of this section, each agency shall promulgate regulations, pursuant to notice and receipt of public comment, specifying a uniform schedule of fees applicable to all constituent units of such agency. Such fees shall be limited to reasonable standard charges for document search and duplication and provide for recovery of only the direct costs of such search and duplication. Documents shall be furnished without charge or at a reduced charge where the agency determines that waiver or reduction of the fee is in the public interest because furnishing the information can be considered as primarily benefiting the general public.

Withheld agency records, court examination.

(B) On complaint, the district court of the United States in the district in which the complainant resides, or has his principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia, has jurisdiction to enjoin the agency from withholding agency records and to order the production of any agency records improperly withheld from the complainant. In such a case the court shall determine the matter de novo, and may examine the contents of such agency records in camera to determine whether such records or any part thereof shall be withheld under any of the exemptions set forth in subsection (b) of this section, and the burden is on the agency to sustain its action.

Complaints, response by defendant.

(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the defendant shall serve an answer or otherwise plead to any complaint made under this subsection within thirty days after service upon the defendant of the pleading in which such complaint is made, unless the court otherwise directs for good cause shown.

(D) Except as to cases the court considers of greater importance, proceedings before the district court, as authorized by this subsection, and appeals therefrom, take precedence on the docket over all cases and shall be assigned for hearing and trial or for argument at the earliest practicable date and expedited in every way.

Attorney fees and costs.

(E) The court may assess against the United States reasonable attorney fees and other litigation costs reasonably incurred in any case under this section in which the complainant has substantially prevailed.

CSC proceeding against officer or employee.

(F) Whenever the court orders the production of any agency records improperly withheld from the complainant and assesses against the United States reasonable attorney fees and other litigation costs, and the court additionally issues a written finding that the circumstances surrounding the withholding raise questions whether agency personnel acted arbitrarily or capriciously with respect to the withholding, the Civil Service Commission shall promptly initiate a proceeding to determine whether disciplinary action is warranted against the officer or employee who was primarily responsible for the withholding. The Commission, after investigation and consideration of the evidence submitted, shall submit its findings and recommendations to the administrative authority of the agency concerned and shall send copies of the findings and recommendations to the officer or employee or his representative. The administrative authority shall take the corrective action that the Commission recommends.

Noncompliance, penalty.

(G) In the event of noncompliance with the order of the court, the district court may punish for contempt the responsible employee, and in the case of a uniformed service, the responsible member.

(5) Each agency having more than one member shall maintain and make available for public inspection a record of the final votes of each member in every agency proceeding.

Administrative deadlines.

(6) (A) Each agency, upon any request for records made under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of this subsection, shall—

(i) determine within ten days (excepting Saturdays, Sundays, and legal public holidays) after the receipt of any such request whether to comply with such request and shall immediately notify the person making such request of such determination and the reasons therefor, and of the right of such person to appeal to the head of the agency any adverse determination; and

(ii) make a determination with respect to any appeal within twenty days (excepting Saturdays, Sundays, and legal public holidays) after the receipt of such appeal. If on appeal the denial of the request for records is in whole or in part upheld, the agency shall notify the person making such request of the provisions for judicial review of that determination under paragraph (4) of this subsection.

(B) In unusual circumstances as specified in this subparagraph, the time limits prescribed in either clause (i) or clause (ii) of subparagraph (A) may be extended by written notice to the person making such request setting forth the reasons for such extension and the date on which a determination is expected to be dispatched. No such notice shall specify a date that would result in an extension for more than ten working days. As used in this subparagraph, "unusual circumstances" means, but only to the extent reasonably necessary to the proper processing of the particular request—

"Unusual circumstances."

(i) the need to search for and collect the requested records from field facilities or other establishments that are separate from the office processing the request;

(ii) the need to search for, collect, and appropriately examine a voluminous amount of separate and distinct records which are demanded in a single request; or

(iii) the need for consultation, which shall be conducted with all practicable speed, with another agency having a substantial interest in the determination of the request or among two or more components of the agency having substantial subject-matter interest therein.

(C) Any person making a request to any agency for records under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of this subsection shall be deemed to have exhausted his administrative remedies with respect to such request if the agency fails to comply with the applicable time limit provisions of this paragraph. If the Government can show exceptional circumstances exist and that the agency is exercising due diligence in responding to the request, the court may retain jurisdiction and allow the agency additional time to complete its review of the records. Upon any determination by an agency to comply with a request for records, the records shall be made promptly available to such person making such request. Any notification of denial of any request for records under this subsection shall set forth the names and titles or positions of each person responsible for the denial of such request.

Time extension for agency review.

(b) This section does not apply to matters that are—

Nonapplicability.

(1)(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order;

National defense and foreign policy, exemption.

(2) related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency;

(3) specifically exempted from disclosure by statute (other than section 552b of this title), provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld;

(4) trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential;

(5) inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency;

(6) personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy;

Investigatory records for law enforcement purposes, exemption.

(7) investigatory records compiled for law enforcement purposes, but only to the extent that the production of such records would (A) interfere with enforcement proceedings, (B) deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or an impartial adjudication, (C) constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, (D) disclose the identity of a confidential source and, in the case of a record compiled by a criminal law enforcement authority in the course of a criminal investigation, or by an agency conducting a lawful national security intelligence investigation, confidential information furnished only by the confidential source, (E) disclose investigative techniques and procedures, or (F) endanger the life or physical safety of law enforcement personnel;

(8) contained in or related to examination, operating, or condition reports prepared by, on behalf of, or for the use of an agency responsible for the regulation or supervision of financial institutions; or

(9) geological and geophysical information and data, including maps, concerning wells.

Segregable portions of records.

Any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection.

(c) This section does not authorize withholding of information or limit the availability of records to the public, except as specifically stated in this section. This section is not authority to withhold information from Congress.

Congressional reservation.

Reports to Speaker of the House and President of the Senate.

(d) On or before March 1 of each calendar year, each agency shall submit a report covering the preceding calendar year to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and President of the Senate for referral to the appropriate committees of the Congress. The report shall include—

Contents.

(1) the number of determinations made by such agency not to comply with requests for records made to such agency under subsection (a) and the reasons for each such determination;

(2) the number of appeals made by persons under subsection (a) (6), the result of such appeals, and the reason for the action upon each appeal that results in a denial of information;

(3) the names and titles or positions of each person responsible for the denial of records requested under this section, and the number of instances of participation for each;

(4) the results of each proceeding conducted pursuant to subsection (a) (4) (F), including a report of the disciplinary action taken against the officer or employee who was primarily responsible for improperly withholding records or an explanation of why disciplinary action was not taken;

(5) a copy of every rule made by such agency regarding this section;

(6) a copy of the fee schedule and the total amount of fees collected by the agency for making records available under this section; and

(7) such other information as indicates efforts to administer fully this section.

The Attorney General shall submit an annual report on or before March 1 of each calendar year which shall include for the prior calendar year a listing of the number of cases arising under this section, the exemption involved in each case, the disposition of such case, and the cost, fees, and penalties assessed under subsections (a) (4) (E), (F), and (G). Such report shall also include a description of the efforts undertaken by the Department of Justice to encourage agency compliance with this section. Annual report.

(e) For purposes of this section, the term "agency" as defined in section 551 (1) of this title includes any executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government (including the Executive Office of the President), or any independent regulatory agency. "Agency."

RECORDS MAINTAINED ON INDIVIDUALS. DEFINITIONS; CONDITIONS OF DISCLOSURE; ACCOUNTING OF CERTAIN DISCLOSURES; ACCESS TO RECORDS; AGENCY REQUIRE-

MENTS; AGENCY RULES; CIVIL REMEDIES; RIGHTS OF LEGAL GUARDIANS; CRIMINAL PENALTIES; GENERAL EXEMPTIONS; SPECIFIC EXEMPTIONS; ARCHIVAL RECORDS; GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS; MAILING LISTS; REPORT ON NEW SYSTEMS (88 Stat. 1897; 89 Stat. 1057; 5 U.S.C. 552a).

Sec. 552a. Records maintained on individuals.

(a) Definitions.

For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "agency" means agency as defined in section 552 (e) of this title;

(2) the term "individual" means a citizen of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence;

(3) the term "maintain" includes maintain, collect, use, or disseminate;

(4) the term "record" means any item, collection, or grouping of information about an individual that is maintained by an agency, including, but not limited to, his education, financial transactions, medical history, and criminal or employment history and that contains his name, or the identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual, such as a finger or voice print or a photograph;

(5) the term "system of records" means a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual;

(6) the term "statistical record" means a record in a system of records maintained for statistical research or reporting purposes only and not used in whole or in part in making any determination about an identifiable individual, except as provided by section 8 of title 13; and

(7) the term "routine use" means, with respect to the disclosure of a record, the use of such record for a purpose which is compatible with the purpose for which it was collected.

(b) Conditions of disclosure.

No agency shall disclose any record which is contained in a system of records by any means of communication to any person, or to another agency, except pursuant to a written request by, or with the prior written consent of, the individual to whom the record pertains, unless disclosure of the record would be—

(1) to those officers and employees of the agency which maintains the record who have a need for the record in the performance of their duties;

(2) required under section 552 of this title;

(3) for a routine use as defined in subsection (a) (7) of this section and described under subsection (e) (4) (D) of this section;

(4) to the Bureau of the Census for purposes of planning or carrying out a census or survey or related activity pursuant to the provisions of title 13;

(5) to a recipient who has provided the agency with advance adequate written assurance that the record will be used solely as a statistical research or reporting record, and the record is to be transferred in a form that is not individually identifiable;

(6) to the National Archives of the United States as a record which has sufficient historical or other value to warrant its continued preservation by the United States Government, or for evaluation by the Administrator of General Services or his designee to determine whether the record has such value;

(7) to another agency or to an instrumentality of any governmental jurisdiction within or under the control of the United States for a civil or criminal law enforcement activity if the activity is authorized by law, and if the head of the agency or instrumentality has made a written request to the agency which maintains the record specifying the particular portion desired and the law enforcement activity for which the record is sought;

(8) to a person pursuant to a showing of compelling circumstances affecting the health or safety of an individual if upon such disclosure notification is transmitted to the last known address of such individual;

(9) to either House of Congress, or, to the extent of matter within its jurisdiction, any committee or subcommittee thereof, any joint committee of Congress or subcommittee of any such joint committee;

(10) to the Comptroller General, or any of his authorized representatives, in the course of the performance of the duties of the General Accounting Office; or

(11) pursuant to the order of a court of competent jurisdiction.

(c) Accounting of certain disclosures.

Each agency, with respect to each system of records under its control shall—

(1) except for disclosures made under subsections (b) (1) or (b) (2) of this section, keep an accurate accounting of—

(A) the date, nature, and purpose of each disclosure of a record to any person or to another agency made under subsection (b) of this section; and

(B) the name and address of the person or agency to whom the disclosure is made;

(2) retain the accounting made under paragraph (1) of this subsection for at least five years or the life of the record, whichever is longer, after the disclosure for which the accounting is made;

(3) except for disclosures made under subsection (b) (7) of this section, make the accounting made under paragraph (1) of this subsection available to the individual named in the record at his request; and

(4) inform any person or other agency about any correction or notation of dispute mad by the agency in accordance with subsection (d) of this section of any record that has been disclosed to the person or agency if an accounting of the disclosure was made.

(d) Access to records.

Each agency that maintains a system of records shall—

(1) upon request by any individual to gain access to his record or to any information pertaining to him which is contained in the system, permit him and upon his request, a person of his own choosing to accompany him, to review the record and have a copy made of all or any portion thereof in a form comprehensible to him, except that the agency may require the individual to furnish a written statement authorizing discussion of that individual's record in the accompanying person's presence;

Personal review.

(2) permit the individual to request amendment of a record pertaining to him and—

Amendment request.

(A) not later than 10 days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal public holidays) after the date of receipt of such request, acknowledge in writing such receipt; and

(B) promptly, either—

(i) make any correction of any portion thereof which the individual believes is not accurate, relevant, timely, or complete; or

(ii) inform the individual of its refusal to amend the record in accordance with his request, the reason for the refusal, the procedures established by the agency for the individual to request a review of that refusal by the head of the agency or an officer designated by the head of the agency, and the name and business address of that official;

(3) permit the individual who disagrees with the refusal of the agency to amend his record to request a review of such refusal, and not later than 30 days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal public holidays) from the date on which the individual requests such review, complete such review and make a final determination unless, for good cause shown, the head of the agency extends such 30-day period; and if, after his review, the reviewing official also refuses to amend the record in accordance with the request, permit the individual to file with the agency a concise statement setting forth the reasons for his disagreement with the refusal of the agency, and notify the individual of the provisions for judicial review of the reviewing official's determination under subsection (g) (1) (A) of this section;

Notation of dispute.

(4) in any disclosure, containing information about which the individual has filed a statement of disagreement, occurring after the filing of the statement under paragraph (3) of this subsection, clearly note any portion of the record which is disputed and provide copies of the statement and, if the agengy deems it appropriate, copies of a concise statement of the reasons of the agency for not making the amendments requested, to persons or other agencies to whom the disputed record has been disclosed; and

(5) nothing in this section shall allow an individual access to any information compiled in reasonable anticipation of a civil action or proceeding.

(e) Agency requirements.

Each agency that maintains a system of records shall—

(1) maintain in its record only such information about an individual as is relevant and necessary to accomplish a purpose of the agency required to be accomplished by statute or by executive order of the President;

(2) collect information to the greatest extent practicable directly from the subject individual when the information may result in adverse determinations about an individual's rights, benefits, and privileges under Federal programs;

(3) inform each individual whom it asks to supply information, on the form which it uses to collect the information or on a separate form that can be retained by the individual—

(A) the authority (whether granted by statute, or by executive order of the President) which authorizes the solicitation of the information and whether disclosure of such information is mandatory or voluntary;

(B) the principal purpose or purposes for which the information is intended to be used;

(C) the routine uses which may be made of the information, as published pursuant to paragraph (4) (D) of this subsection; and

(D) the effects on him, if any, of not providing all or any part of the requested information;

Publication in Federal Register.

(4) subject to the provisions of paragraph (11) of this subsection, publish in the Federal Register at least annually a notice of the existence and character of the system of records, which notice shall include—

(A) the name and location of the system;

(B) the categories of individuals on whom records are maintained in the system;

(C) the categories of records maintained in the system;

(D) each routine use of the records contained in the system, including the categories of users and the purpose of such use;

(E) the policies and practices of the agency regarding storage, retrievability, access controls, retention, and disposal of the records;

(F) the title and business address of the agency official who is responsible for the system of records;

(G) the agency procedures whereby an individual can be notified at his request if the system of records contains a record pertaining to him;

(H) the agency procedures whereby an individual can be notified at his request how he can gain access to any record pertaining to him contained in the system of records, and how he can contest its content; and

(I) the categories of sources of records in the system;

(5) maintain all records which are used by the agency in making any determination about any individual with such accuracy, relevance, timeliness, and completeness as is reasonably necessary to assure fairness to the individual in the determination;

(6) prior to disseminating any record about an individual to any person other than an agency, unless the dissemination is made pursuant to subsection (b) (2) of this section, make reasonable efforts to assure that such records are accurate, complete, timely, and relevant for agency purposes;

(7) maintain no record describing how any individual exercises rights guaranteed by the First Amendment unless expressly authorized by statute or by the individual about whom the record is maintained or unless pertinent to and within the scope of an authorized law enforcement activity;

(8) make reasonable efforts to serve notice on an individual when any record on such individual is made available to any person under compulsory legal process when such process becomes a matter of public record;

Rules of conduct.

(9) establish rules of conduct for persons invloved in the design, development, operation, or maintenance of any system of records, or in maintaining any record, and instruct each such person wieh respect to such rules and the requirements of this section, including any other rules and procedures adopted pursuant to this section and the penalties for noncompliance;

Confidentiality of records.

(10) establish appropriate administrative, technical, and physical safeguards to insure the security and confidentiality of records and to protect against any anticipated threats or hazards to their security or integrity which could result in substantial harm, embarrassment, inconvenience, or unfairness to any individual on whom information is maintained; and

(11) at least 30 days prior to publication of information under paragraph (4) (D) of this subsection, publish in the Federal Register notice of any new use or intended use of the information in the system, and provide an opportunity for interested persons to submit written data, views, or arguments to the agency.

Publication in Federal Register.

(f) Agency rules.

In order to carry out the provisions of this section, each agency that maintains a system of records shall promulgate rules, in accordance with the requirements (including general notice) of section 553 of this title, which shall—

(1) establish procedures whereby an individual can be notified in response to his request if any system of records named by the individual contains a record pertaining to him;

(2) define reasonable times, places, and requirements for identifying an individual who requests his record or information pertaining to him before the agency shall make the record or information available to the individual;

(3) establish procedures for the disclosure to an individual upon his request of his record or information pertaining to him, including special procedure, if deemed necessary, for the disclosure to an individual of medical records, including psychological records pertaining to him;

(4) establish procedures for reviewing a request from an individual concerning the amendment of any record or information pertaining to the individual, for making a determination on the request, for an appeal within the agency of an initial adverse agency determination, and for whatever additional means may be necessary for each individual to be able to exercise fully his rights under this section; and

(5) establish fees to be charged, if any, to any individual for making copies of his record, excluding the cost of any search for and review of the record.

Fees.

The Office of the Federal Register shall annually compile and publish the rules promulgated under this subsection and agency notices published under subsection (e) (4) of this section in a form available to the public at low cost.

Publication in Federal Register.

(g) (1) Civil remedies.

Whenever any agency

(A) makes a determination under subsection (d) (3) of this section not to amend an individual's record in accordance with his request, or fails to make such review in conformity with that subsection;

(B) refuses to comply with an individual request under subsection (d) (1) of this section;

(C) fails to maintain any record concerning any individual with such accuracy, relevance, timeliness, and completeness as is necessary to assure fairness in any determination relating to the qualifications, character, rights, or opportunities of, or benefits to the individual that may be made on the basis of such record, and consequently a determination is made which is adverse to the individual; or

(D) fails to comply with any other provision of this section, or any rule promulgated thereunder, in such a way as to have an adverse effect on an individual, the individual may bring a civil action against the agency, and the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction in the matters under the provisions of this subsection.

Jurisdiction.

(2) (A) In any suit brought under the provisions of subsection (g) (1) (A) of this section, the court may order the agency to amend the individual's record in accordance with his request or in such other way as the court may direct. In such a case the court shall determine the matter de novo.

Amendment of record.

(B) The court may assess against the United States reasonable attorney fees and other litigation costs reasonably incurred in any case under this paragraph in which the complainant has substantially prevailed.

(3) (A) In any suit brought under the provisions of subsection (g) (1) (B) of this section, the court may enjoin the agency from withholding the records and order the production to the complainant of any agency records improperly withheld from him. In such a case the court shall determine the matter de novo, and may examine the contents of any agency records in camera to determine whether the records or any portion thereof may be withheld under any of the exemptions set forth in subsection (k) of this section, and the burden is on the agency to sustain its action.

Injunction.

(B) The court may assess against the United States reasonable attorney fees and other litigation costs reasonably incurred in any case under this paragraph in which the complainant has substantially prevailed.

(4) In any suit brought under the provisions of subsection (g) (1) (C) or (D) of this section in which the court determines that the agency acted in a manner which was intentional or willful, the United States shall be liable to the individual in an amount equal to the sum of—

Damages.

(A) actual damages sustained by the individual as a result of the refusal or failure, but in no case shall a person entitled to recovery receive less than the sum of $1,000; and

(B) the costs of the action together with reasonable attorney fees as determined by the court.

(5) An action to enforce any liability created under this section may be brought in the district court of the United States in the district in which the complainant resides, or has his principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia, without regard to the amount in controversy, within two years from the date on which the cause of action arises, except that where an agency has materially and willfully misrepresented any information required under this section to be disclosed to an individual and the information so misrepresented is material to establishment of the liability of the agency to the individual under this section, the action may be brought at any time within two years after discovery by the individual of the misrepresentation. Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize any civil action by reason of any injury sustained as the result of a disclosure of a record prior to September 27, 1975.

(h) Rights of legal guardians.

For the purpose of this section, the parent of any minor, or the legal guardian of any individual who has been declared to be incompetent due to physical or mental incapacity or age by a court of competent jurisdiction, may act on behalf of the individual.

(i)(1) Criminal penalties.

Any officer or employee of an agency, who by virtue of his employment or official position, has possession of, or access to, agency records which contain individually identifiable information the disclosure of which is prohibited by this section or by rules or regulations established thereunder, and who knowing that disclosure of the specific material is so prohibited, willfully discloses the material in any manner to any person or agency not entitled to receive it, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than $5,000.

(2) Any officer or employee of any agency who willfully maintains a system of records without meeting the notice requirements of subsection (e) (4) of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than $5,000.

(3) Any person who knowingly and willfully requests or obtains any record concerning an individual from an agency under false pretenses shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than $5,000.

(j) General exemptions.

The head of any agency may promulgate rules, in accordance with the requirements (including general notice) of sections 553(b) (1), (2), and (3), (c), and (e) of this title, to exempt any system of records within the agency from any part of this section except subsections (b), (c) (1) and (2), (e) (4) (A) through (F), (e) (6), (7), (9), (10), and (11), and (i) if the system of records is—

(1) maintained by the Central Intelligence Agency; or

(2) maintained by an agency or component thereof which performs as its principal function any activity pertaining to the enforcement of criminal laws, including police efforts to prevent, control, or reduce crime or to apprehend criminals, and the activities of prosecutors, courts, correctional, probation, pardon, or parole authorities, and which consists of (A) information compiled for the purpose of identifying individual criminal offenders and alleged offenders and consisting only of identifying data and notations of arrests, the nature and disposition of criminal charges, sentencing, confinement, release, and parole and probation status; (B) information compiled for the purpose of a criminal investigation, including reports of informants and investigators, and associated with an identifiable individual; or (C) reports identifiable to an individual compiled at any stage of the process of enforcement of the criminal laws from arrest or indictment through release from supervision.

At the time rules are adopted under this subsection, the agency shall include in the statement required under section 553(c) of this title, the reasons why the system of records is to be exempted from a provision of this section.

(k) Specific exemptions.

The head of any agency may promulgate rules, in accordance with the requirements (including general notice) of sections 553(b) (1), (2), and (3), (c), and (e) of this title, to exempt any system of records within the agency from subsections (c) (3), (d), (e) (1), (e) (4) (G), (H), and (I) and (f) of this section if the system of records is—

(1) subject to the provisions of section 552(b) (1) of this title;

(2) investigatory material compiled for law enforcement purposes, other than material within the scope of subsection (j) (2) of this section: Provided, however, That if any individual is denied any right, privilege, or benefit that he would otherwise be entitled by Federal law, or for which he would otherwise be eligible, as a result of the maintenance of such material, such material shall be provided to such individual, except to the extent that the disclosure of such material would reveal the identity of a source who furnished information to the Government under an express promise that the identity of the source would be held in confidence, or, prior to the effective date of this section, under an implied promise that the identity of the source would be held in confidence;

(3) maintained in connection with providing protective services to the President of the United States or other individuals pursuant to section 3056 of title 18;

(4) required by statute to be maintained and used solely as statistical records;

(5) investigatory material compiled solely for the purpose of determining suitability, eligibility, or qualifications for Federal civilian employment, military service, Federal contracts, or access to classified information, but only to the extent that the disclosure of such material would reveal the identity of a source who furnished information to the Government under an express promise that the identity of the source would be held in confidence, or, prior to the effective date of this section, under an implied promise that the identity of the source would be held in confidence;

(6) testing or examination material used solely to determine individual qualifications for appointment or promotion in the Federal service the disclosure of which would compromise the objectivity or fairness of the testing or examination process; or

(7) evaluation material used to determine potential for promotion in the armed services, but only to the extent that the disclosure of such material would reveal the identity of a source who furnished information to the Government under an express promise that the identity of the source would be held in confidence, or, prior to the effective date of this section, under an implied promise that the identity of the source would be held in confidence.

At the time rules are adopted under this subsection, the agency shall include in the statement required under section 553(c) of this title, the reasons why the system of records is to be exempted from a provision of this section.

(l)(1) Archival records.

Each agency record which is accepted by the Administrator of General Services for storage, processing, and servicing in accordance with section 3103 of title 44 shall, for the purposes of this section, be considered to be maintained by the agency which deposited the record and shall be subject to the provisions of this section. The Administrator of General Services shall not disclose the record except to the agency which maintains the record, or under rules established by that agency which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this section.

(2) Each agency record pertaining to an identifiable individual which was transferred to the National Archives of the United States as a record which has sufficient historical or other value to warrant its continued preservation by the United States Government, prior to the effective date of this section, shall, for the purposes of this section, be considered to be maintained by the National Archives and shall not be subject to the provisions of this section, except that a statement generally describing such records (modeled after the requirements relating to records subject to subsections (e) (4) (A) through (G) of this section) shall be published in the Federal Register.

Publication in Federal Register.

(3) Each agency record pertaining to an identifiable individual which is transferred to the National Archives of the United States as a record which has sufficient historical or other value to warrant its continued preservation by the United States Government, on or after the effective date of this section, shall, for the purposes of this section, be considered to be maintained by the National Archives and shall be exempt from the requirements of this section except subsections (e) (4) (A) through (G) and (e) (9) of this section.

(m) Government contractors.

When an agency provides by a contract for the operation by or on behalf of the agency of a system of records to accomplish an agency function, the agency shall, consistent with its authority, cause the requirements of this section to be applied to such system. For purposes of subsection (i) of this section any such contractor and any employee of such contractor, if such contract is agreed to on or after the effective date of this section, shall be considered to be an employee of an agency.

(n) Mailing lists.

An individual's name and address may not be sold or rented by an agency unless such action is specifically authorized by law. This provision shall not be construed to require the withholding of names and addresses otherwise permitted to be made public.

(o) Report on new systems.

Notice to Congress and OMB.

Each agency shall provide adequate advance notice to Congress and the Office of Management and Budget of any proposal to establish or alter any system of records in order to permit an evaluation of the probable or potential effect of such proposal on the privacy and other personal or property rights of individuals or the disclosure of information relating to such individuals, and its effect on the preservation of the constitutional principles of federalism and separation of powers.

(p) Annual report.

Report to Speaker of the House and President of the Senate.

The President shall submit to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, by June 30 of each calendar year, a consolidated report, separately listing for each Federal agency the number of records contained in any system of records which were exempted from the application of this section under the provisions of subsections (j) and (k) of this section during the preceding calendar year, and the reasons for the exemptions, and such other information as indicates efforts to administer fully this section.

(q) Effect of other laws.

No agency shall rely on any exemption contained in section 552 of this title to withhold from an individual any record which is otherwise accessible to such individual under the provisions of this section.

OPEN MEETINGS. DEFINITIONS; EXCEPTIONS; RECORDED VOTING, PUBLIC AVAILABILITY OF VOTE, REGULATION FOR CLOSED MEETINGS, PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT; SCHEDULING, CHANGES, PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT, PUBLICATION IN FEDERAL REGISTER; CERTIFICATION FOR CLOSED MEETING, TRANSCRIPTS, RECORDINGS OR MINUTES, PUBLIC AVAILABILITY, RETENTION; IMPLEMENTING REGULATIONS; JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS; LITIGATION COSTS, ASSESSMENT; REPORT TO CONGRESS (90 Stat. 1241; 5 U.S.C. 552b).

Sec. 552b. Open meetings.

(a) For purposes of this section— Definitions.

(1) the term "agency" means any agency, as defined in section 552(e) of this title, headed by a collegial body composed of two or more individual members, a majority of whom are appointed to such position by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, and any subdivision thereof authorized to act on behalf of the agency;

(2) the term "meeting" means the deliberations of at least the number of individual agency members required to take action on behalf of the agency where such deliberations determine or result in the joint conduct or disposition of official agency business, but does not include deliberations required or permitted by subsection (d) or (e); and

(3) the term "member" means an individual who belongs to a collegial body heading an agency.

(b) Members shall not jointly conduct or dispose of agency business other than in accordance with this section. Except as provided in subsection (c), every portion of every meeting of an agency shall be open to public observation.

(c) Except in a case where the agency finds that the public interest requires otherwise, the second sentence of subsection (b) shall not apply to any portion of an agency meeting, and the requirements of subsections (d) and (e) shall not apply to any information pertaining to such meeting otherwise required by this section to be disclosed to the public, where the agency properly determines that such portion or portions of its meeting or the disclosure of such information is likely to—

(1) disclose matters that are (A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interests of national defense or foreign policy and (B) in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order;

(2) relate solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency;

(3) disclose matters specifically exempted from disclosure by statute (other than section 552 of this title), provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld;

(4) disclose trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential;

(5) involve accusing any person of a crime, or formally censuring any person;

(6) disclose information of a personal nature where disclosure would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy;

(7) disclose investigatory records compiled for law enforcement purposes, or information which if written would be contained in such records, but only to the extent that the production of such records or information would (A) interfere with enforcement proceedings, (B) deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or an impartial adjudication, (C) constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, (D) disclose the identity of a confidential source and, in the case of a record compiled by a criminal law enforcement authority in the course of a criminal investigation, or by an agency conducting a lawful national security intelligence investigation, confidential information furnished only by the confidential source, (E) disclose investigative techniques and procedures, or (F) endanger the life or physical safety of law enforcement personnel;

(8) disclose information contained in or related to examination, operating, or condition reports prepared by, on behalf of, or for the use of an agency responsible for the regulation or supervision of financial institutions;

(9) disclose information the premature disclosure of which would—

(A) in the case of an agency which regulates currencies, securities, commodities, or financial institutions, be likely to (i) lead to significant financial speculation in currencies, securities, or commodities, or (ii) significantly endanger the stability of any financial institution; or

(B) in the case of any agency, be likely to significantly frustrate implementation of a proposed agency action, except that subparagraph (B) shall not apply in any instance where the agency has already disclosed to the public the content or nature of its proposed action, or where the agency is required by law to make such disclosure on its own initiative prior to taking final agency action on such proposal; or

(10) specifically concern the agency's issuance of a subpena, or the agency's participation in a civil action or proceeding, an action in a foreign court or international tribunal, or an arbitration, or the initiation, conduct, or disposition by the agency of a particular case of formal agency adjudication pursuant to the procedures in section 554 of this title or otherwise involving a determination on the record after opportunity for a hearing.

Recorded voting.

(d) (1) Action under subsection (c) shall be taken only when a majority of the entire membership of the agency (as defined in subsection (a)(1)) votes to take such action. A separate vote of the agency members shall be taken with respect to each agency meeting a portion or portions of which are proposed to be closed to the public pursuant to subsection (c), or with respect to any information which is proposed to be withheld under subsection (c). A single vote may be taken with respect to a series of meetings, a portion or portions of which are proposed to be closed to the public, or with respect to any information concerning such series of meetings, so long as each meeting in such series involves the same particular matters and is scheduled to be held no more than thirty days after the initial meeting in such series. The vote of each agency member participating in such vote shall be recorded and no proxies shall be allowed.

(2) Whenever any person whose interests may be directly affected by a portion of a meeting requests that the agency close such portion to the public for any of the reasons referred to in paragraph (5), (6), or (7) of subsection (c), the agency, upon request of any one of its members, shall vote by recorded vote whether to close such meeting.

Copies, availability.

(3) Within one day of any vote taken pursuant to paragraph (1) or (2), the agency shall make publicly available a written copy of such vote reflecting the vote of each member on the question. If a portion of a meeting is to be closed to the public, the agency shall, within one day of the vote taken pursuant to paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection, make publicly available a full written explanation of its action closing the portion together with a list of all persons expected to attend the meeting and their affiliation.

Meeting closure, regulation.

(4) Any agency, a majority of whose meetings may properly be closed to the public pursuant to paragraph (4), (8), (9) (A), or (10) of subsection (c), or any combination thereof, may provide by regulation for the closing of such meetings or portions thereof in the event that a majority of the members of the agency votes by recorded vote at the beginning of such meeting, or portion thereof, to close the exempt portion or portions of the meeting, and a copy of such vote, reflecting the vote of each member on the question, is made available to the public. The provisions of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of this subsection and subsection (e) shall not apply to any portion of a meeting to which such regulations apply: Provided, That the agency shall, except to the extent that such information is exempt from disclosure under the provisions of subsection (c), provide the public with public announcement of the time, place, and subject matter of the meeting and of each portion thereof at the earliest practicable time.

Public announcement.

(e) (1) In the case of each meeting, the agency shall make public announcement, at least one week before the meeting, of the time, place, and subject matter of the meeting, whether it is to be open or closed to the public, and the name and phone number of the official designated by the agency to respond to requests for information about the meeting. Such announcement shall be made unless a majority of the members of the agency determines by a recorded vote that agency business requires that such meeting be called at an earlier date, in which case the agency shall make public announcement of the time, place, and subject matter of such meeting, and whether open or closed to the public, at the earliest practicable time.

Scheduling, public announcement.

(2) The time or place of a meeting may be changed following the public announcement required by paragraph (1) only if the agency publicly announces such change at the earliest practicable time. The subject matter of a meeting, or the determination of the agency to open or close a meeting, or portion of a meeting, to the public, may be changed following the public announcement required by this subsection only if (A) a majority of the entire membership of the agency determines by a recorded vote that agency business so requires and that no earlier announcement of the change was possible, and (B) the agency publicly announces such change and the vote of each member upon such change at the earliest practicable time.

Scheduling changes, public announcement.

Scheduling notice, publication in Federal Register.

(3) Immediately following each public announcement required by this subsection, notice of the time, place, and subject matter of a meeting, whether the meeting is open or closed, any change in one of the preceding, and the name and phone number of the official designated by the agency to respond to requests for information about the meeting, shall also be submitted for publication in the Federal Register.

Closed meetings, certification.

Transcripts, recordings or minutes.

(f) (1) For every meeting closed pursuant to paragraphs (1) through (10) of subsection (c), the General Counsel or chief legal officer of the agency shall publicly certify that, in his or her opinion, the meeting may be closed to the public and shall state each relevant exemptive provision. A copy of such certification, together with a statement from the presiding officer of the meeting setting forth the time and place of the meeting, and the persons present, shall be retained by the agency. The agency shall maintain a complete transcript or electronic recording adequate to record fully the proceedings of each meeting, or portion of a meeting, closed to the public, except that in the case of a meeting, or portion of a meeting, closed to the public pursuant to paragraph (8), (9) (A), or (10) of subsection (c), the agency shall maintain either such a transcript or recording, or a set of minutes. Such minutes shall fully and clearly describe all matters discussed and shall provide a full and accurate summary of any actions taken, and the reasons therefor, including a description of each of the views expressed on any item and the record of any rollcall vote (reflecting the vote of each member on the question). All documents considered in connection with any action shall be identified in such minutes.

Public availability.

(2) The agency shall make promptly available to the public, in a place easily accessible to the public, the transcript, electronic recording, or minutes (as required by paragraph (1)) of the discussion of any item on the agenda, or of any item of the testimony of any witness received at the meeting, except for such item or items of such discussion or testimony as the agency determines to contain information which may be withheld under subsection (c). Copies of such transcript, or minutes, or a transcription of such recording disclosing the identity of each speaker, shall be furnished to any person at the actual cost of duplication or transcription. The agency shall maintain a complete verbatim copy of the transcript, a complete copy of the minutes, or a complete electronic recording of each meeting, or portion of a meeting, closed to the public, for a period of at least two years after such meeting, or until one year after the conclusion of any agency proceeding with respect to which the meeting or portion was held, whichever occurs later.

Retention.

(g) Each agency subject to the requirements of this section shall, within 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, following consultation with the Office of the Chairman of the Administrative Conference of the United States and published notice in the Federal Register of at least thirty days and opportunity for written comment by any person, promulgate regulations to implement the requirements of subsections (b) through (f) of this section. Any person may bring a proceeding in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia to require an agency to promulgate such regulations if such agency has not promulgated such regulations within the time period specified herein. Subject to any limitations of time provided by law, any person may bring a proceeding in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia to set aside agency regulations issued pursuant to this subsection that are not in accord with the requirements of subsections (b) through (f) of this section and to require the promulgation of regulations that are in accord with such subsections.

Regulations.
Notice, publication in Federal Register.

Judicial proceeding.

(h) (1) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to enforce the requirements of subsections (b) through (f) of this section by declaratory judgment, injunctive relief, or other relief as may be appropriate. Such actions may be brought by any person against an agency prior to, or within sixty days after, the meeting out of which the violation of this section arises, except that if public announcement of such meeting is not initially provided by the agency in accordance with the requirements of this section, such action may be instituted pursuant to this section at any time prior to sixty days after any public announcement of such meeting. Such actions may be brought in the district court of the United States for the district in which the agency meeting is held or in which the agency in question has its headquarters, or in the District Court for the District of Columbia. In such actions a defendant shall serve his answer within thirty days after the service of the complaint. The burden is on the defendant to sustain his action. In deciding such cases the court may examine in camera any portion of the transcript, electronic recording, or minutes of a meeting closed to the public, and may take such additional evidence as it deems necessary. The court, having due regard for orderly administration and the public interest, as well as the interests of the parties, may grant such equitable relief as it deems appropriate, including granting an injunction against future violations of this section or ordering the agency to make available to the public such portion of the transcript, recording, or minutes of a meeting as is not authorized to be withheld under subsection (c) of this section.

Jurisdiction.

Civil actions.

Relief.

Inquiry.

(2) Any Federal court otherwise authorized by law to review agency action may, at the application of any person properly participating in the proceeding pursuant to other applicable law, inquire into violations by the agency of the requirements of this section and afford such relief as it deems appropriate. Nothing in this section authorizes any Federal court having jurisdiction solely on the basis of paragraph (1) to set aside, enjoin, or invalidate any agency action (other than an action to close a meeting or to withhold information under this section) taken or discussed at any agency meeting out of which the violation of this section arose.

Litigation costs, assessment.

(i) The court may assess against any party reasonable attorney fees and other litigation costs reasonably incurred by any other party who substantially prevails in any action brought in accordance with the provisions of subsection (g) or (h) of this section, except that costs may be assessed against the plaintiff only where the court finds that the suit was initiated by the plaintiff primarily for frivolous or dilatory purposes. In the case of assessment of costs against an agency, the costs may be assessed by the court against the United States.

(j) Each agency subject to the requirements of this section shall annually report to Congress regarding its compliance with such requirements, including a tabulation of the total number of agency meetings open to the public, the total number of meetings closed to the public, the reasons for closing such meetings, and a description of any litigation brought against the agency under this section, including any costs assessed against the agency in such litigation (whether or not paid by the agency).

Report to Congress.

(k) Nothing herein expands or limits the present rights of any person under section 552 of this title, except that the exemptions set forth in subsection (c) of this section shall govern in the case of any request made pursuant to section 552 to copy or inspect the transcripts, recordings, or minutes described in subsection (f) of this section. The requirements of chapter 33 of title 44, United States Code, shall not apply to the transcripts, recordings, and minutes described in subsection (f) of this section.

(l) This section does not constitute authority to withhold any information from Congress, and does not authorize the closing of any agency meeting or portion thereof required by any other provision of law to be open.

(m) Nothing in this section authorizes any agency to withhold from any individual any record, including transcripts, recordings, or minutes required by this section, which is otherwise accessible to such individual under section 552a of this title.

RULE MAKING (80 Stat. 383; 5 U.S.C. 553).

Sec. 553. (a) This section applies, according to the provisions thereof, except to the extent that there is involved—

(1) a military or foreign affairs function of the United States; or

(2) a matter relating to agency management or personnel or to public property, loans, grants, benefits, or contracts.

(b) General notice of proposed rule making shall be published in the Federal Register, unless persons subject thereto are named and either personally served or otherwise have actual notice thereof in accordance with law. The notice shall include—

(1) a statement of the time, place, and nature of public rule making proceedings;

(2) reference to the legal authority under which the rule is proposed; and

(3) either the terms or substance of the proposed rule or a description of the subjects and issues involved.

Except when notice or hearing is required by statute, this subsection does not apply—

(A) to interpretative rules, general statements of policy, or rules of agency organization, procedure, or practice; or

(B) when the agency for good cause finds (and incorporates the finding and a brief statement of reasons therefor in the rules issued) that notice and public procedure thereon are impracticable, unnecessary, or contrary to the public interest.

Participation in rule making.

(c) After notice required by this section, the agency shall give interested persons an opportunity to participate in the rule making through submission of written data, views, arguments with or without opportunity for oral presentation. After consideration of the relevant matter presented, the agency shall incorporate in the rules adopted a concise general statement of their basis and purpose. When rules are required by statute to be made on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing, sections 556 and 557 of this title apply instead of this subsection.

(d) The required publication or service of a substantive rule shall be made not less than 30 days before its effective date, except—

(1) a substantive rule which grants or recognizes an exemption or relieves a restriction;

(2) interpretative rules and statements of policy; or

(3) as otherwise provided by the agency for good cause found and published with the rule.

(e) Each agency shall give an interested person the right to petition for the issuance, amendment, or repeal of a rule.

ADJUDICATIONS (80 Stat. 384; 5 U.S.C. 554).

Sec. 554. (a) This section applies, according to the provisions thereof, in every case of adjudication required by statute to be determined on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing, except to the extent that there is involved—

Adjudication required.

(1) a matter subject to a subsequent trial of the law and the facts de novo in a court;

(2) the selection or tenure of an employee, except a hearing examiner appointed under section 3105 of this title;

(3) proceedings in which decisions rest solely on inspections, tests, or elections;

(4) the conduct of military or foreign affairs functions;

(5) cases in which an agency is acting as an agent for a court; or

(6) the certification of worker representatives.

Persons entitled to notice.

(b) Persons entitled to notice of an agency hearing shall be timely informed of—

(1) the time, place, and nature of the hearing;

(2) the legal authority and jurisdiction under which the hearing is to be held; and

(3) the matters of fact and law asserted.

When private persons are the moving parties, other parties to the proceeding shall give prompt notice of issues controverted in fact or law; and in other instances agencies may by rule require responsive pleading. In fixing the time and place for hearings, due regard shall be had for the convenience and necessity of the parties or their representatives.

(c) The agency shall give all interested parties opportunity for—

(1) the submission and consideration of facts, arguments, offers of settlement, or proposals of adjustment when time, the nature of the proceeding, and the public interest permit; and

(2) to the extent that the parties are unable so to determine a controversy by consent, hearing and decision on notice and in accordance with sections 556 and 557 of this title.

(d) The employee who presides at the reception of evidence pursuant to section 556 of this title shall make the recommended decision or initial decision required by section 557 of this title, unless he becomes unavailable to the agency. Except to the extent required for the disposition of ex parte matters as authorized by law, such an employee may not—

(1) consult a person or party on a fact in issue, unless on notice and opportunity for all parties to participate; or

(2) be responsible to or subject to the supervision or direction of an employee or agent engaged in the performance of investigative or prosecuting functions for an agency.

Investigator may not participate.

An employee or agent engaged in the performance of investigative or prosecuting functions for an agency in a case may not, in that or a factually related case, participate or advise in the decision, recommended decision, or agency review pursuant to section 557 of this title, except as witness or counsel in public proceedings. This subsection does not apply—

(A) in determining applications for initial licenses;

(B) to proceedings involving the validity or application of rates, facilities, or practices of public utilities or carriers; or

(C) to the agency or a member or members of the body comprising the agency.

(e) The agency, with like effect as in the case of other orders, and in its sound discretion, may issue a declaratory order to terminate a controversy or remove uncertainty.

ANCILLARY MATTERS (80 Stat. 385; 5 U.S.C. 555).

Sec. 555. (a) This section applies, according to the provisions thereof, except as otherwise provided by this subchapter.

Counsel.

(b) A person compelled to appear in person before an agency or representative thereof is entitled to be accompanied, represented, and advised by counsel or, if permitted by the agency, by other qualified representative. A party is entitled to appear in person or by or with counsel or other duly qualified representative in an agency proceeding. So far as the orderly conduct of public business permits, an interested person may appear before an agency or its responsible employees for the presentation, adjustment, or determination of an issue, request, or controversy in a proceeding, whether interlocutory, summary, or otherwise, or in connection with an agency function. With due regard for the convenience and necessity of the parties or their representatives and within a reasonable time, each agency shall proceed to conclude a matter presented to it. This subsection does not grant or deny a person who is not a lawyer the right to appear for or represent others before an agency or in an agency proceeding.

Interested parties may appear.

(c) Process, requirement of a report, inspection, or other investigative act or demand may not be issued, made, or enforced except as authorized by law. A person compelled to submit data or evidence is entitled to retain or, on payment of lawfully prescribed costs, procure a copy or transcript thereof, except that in a nonpublic investigatory proceeding the witness may for good cause be limited to inspection of the official transcript of his testimony.

Transcripts.

(d) Agency subpoenas authorized by law shall be issued to a party on request and, when required by rules of procedure, on a statement or showing of general relevance and reasonable scope of the evidence sought. On contest, the court shall sustain the subpoena or similar process or demand to the extent that it is found to be in accordance with law. In a proceeding for enforcement, the court shall issue an order requiring the appearance of the witness or the production of the evidence or data within a reasonable time under penalty of punishment for contempt in case of contumacious failure to comply.

(e) Prompt notice shall be given of the denial in whole or in part of a written application, petition, or other request of an interested person made in connection with any agency proceeding. Except in affirming a prior denial or when the denial is self-explanatory, the notice shall be accompanied by a brief statement of the grounds for denial.

HEARINGS; PRESIDING EMPLOYEES; POWERS AND DUTIES; BURDEN OF PROOF; EVIDENCE; RECORD AS BASIS OF DECISION (80 Stat. 386; 5 U.S.C. 556).

Sec. 556. (a) This section applies, according to the provisions thereof, to hearings required by section 553 or 554 of this title to be conducted in accordance with this section.

Functions of presiding officers.

(b) There shall preside at the taking of evidence—

(1) the agency;

(2) one or more members of the body which comprises the agency; or

(3) one or more hearing examiners appointed under section 3105 of this title.

This subchapter does not supersede the conduct of specified classes of proceedings, in whole or in part, by or before boards or other employees specially provided for by or designated under statute. The functions of presiding employees and of employees participating in decisions in accordance with section 557 of this title shall be conducted in an impartial manner. A presiding or participating employee may at any time disqualify himself. On the filing in good faith of a timely and sufficient affidavit of personal bias or other disqualification of a presiding or participating employee, the agency shall determine the matter as a part of the record and decision in the case.

Disqualification.

(c) Subject to published rules of the agency and within its powers, employees presiding at hearings may—

Authority of presiding officers.

(1) administer oaths and affirmations;

(2) issue subpoenas authorized by law;

(3) rule on offers of proof and receive relevant evidence;

(4) take depositions or have depositions taken when the ends of justice would be served;

(5) regulate the course of the hearing;

(6) hold conferences for the settlement or simplification of the issues by consent of the parties;

(7) dispose of procedural requests or similar matters;

(8) make or recommend decisions in accordance with section 557 of this title; and

(9) take other action authorized by agency rule consistent with this subchapter.

Burden of proof.

(d) Except as otherwise provided by statute, the proponent of a rule or order has the burden of proof. Any oral or documentary evidence may be received, but the agency as a matter of policy shall provide for the exclusion of irrelevant, immaterial, or unduly repetitious evidence. A sanction may not be imposed or rule or order issued except on consideration of the whole record or those parts thereof cited by a party and supported by and in accordance with the reliable, probative, and substantial evidence. The agency may, to the extent consistent with the interests of justice and the policy of the underlying statutes administered by the agency, consider a violation of section 557(d) of this title sufficient grounds for a decision adverse to a party who has knowingly committed such violation or knowingly caused such violation to occur. A party is entitled to present his case or defense by oral or documentary evidence, to submit rebuttal evidence, and to conduct such cross-examination as may be required for a full and true disclosure of the facts. In rule making or determining claims for money or benefits or applications for initial licenses an agency may, when a party will not be prejudiced thereby, adopt procedures for the submission of all or part of the evidence in written form.

Testimony and exhibits.

(e) The transcript of testimony and exhibits, together with all papers and request filed in the proceeding, constitutes the exclusive record for decision in accordance with section 557 of this title and, on payment of lawfully prescribed costs, shall be made available to the parties. When an agency decision rests on official notice of a material fact not appearing in the evidence in the record, a party is entitled, on timely request, to an opportunity to show the contrary.

INITIAL DECISIONS; CONCLUSIVENESS; REVIEW BY AGENCY; SUBMISSIONS BY PARTIES; CONTENTS OF DECISIONS; RECORD; EX PARTE COMMUNICATION (80 Stat. 387; 90 Stat. 1246; 5 U.S.C. 557).

Sec. 557. (a) This section applies, according to the provisions thereof, when a hearing is required to be conducted in accordance with section 556 of this title.

Discussion of the case: by whom made.

(b) When the agency did not preside at the reception of the evidence, the presiding employee or, in cases not subject to section 554(d) of this title, an employee qualified to preside at hearings pursuant to section 556 of this title, shall initially decide the case unless the agency requires, either in specific cases or by general rule, the entire record to be certified to it for decision. When the presiding employee makes an initial decision, that decision then becomes the decision of the agency without further proceedings unless there is an appeal to, or review on motion of, the agency within time provided by rule. On appeal from or review of the initial decision, the agency has all the powers which it would have in making the initial decision except as it may limit the issues on notice or by rule. Whn the agency makes the decision without having presided at the reception of the evidence, the presiding employee or an employee qualified to preside at hearings pursuant to section 556 of this title shall first recommend a decision, except that in rule making or determining applications for initial licenses—

(1) instead thereof the agency may issue a tentative decision or one of its responsible employees may recommend a decision; or

(2) this procedure may be omitted in a case in which the agency finds on the record that due and timely execution of its functions imperatively and unavoidably so requires.

(c) Before a recommended, initial, or tentative decision, or a decision on agency review of the decision of subordinate employees, the parties are entitled to a reasonable opportunity to submit for the consideration of the employees participating in the decisions—

(1) proposed findings and conclusions; or

(2) exceptions to the decisions or recommended decisions of subordinate employees or to tenative agency decisions; and

(3) supporting reasons for the exceptions or proposed findings or conclusions.

Findings and conclusions of decisions.

The record shall show the ruling on each finding, conclusion, or exception presented. All decisions, including initial, recommended, and tentative decisions, are a part of the record and shall include a statement of—

(A) findings and conclusions, and the reasons or basis therefor, on all the material issues of fact, law, or discretion presented on the record; and

(B) the appropriate rule, order, sanction, relief, or denial thereof.

"Ex parte communication."

(d) (1) In any agency proceeding which is subject to subsection (a) of this section, except to the extent required for the disposition of ex parte matters as authorized by law—

(A) no interested person outside the agency shall make or knowingly cause to be made to any member of the body comprising the agency, administrative law judge, or other employee who is or may reasonably be expected to be involved in the decisional process of the proceeding, an ex parte communication relevant to the merits of the proceeding;

(B) no member of the body comprising the agency, administrative law judge, or other employee who is or may reasonably be expected to be involved in the decisional process of the proceeding, shall make or knowingly cause to be made to any interested person outside the agency an ex parte communication relevant to the merits of the proceeding;

(C) a member of the body comprising the agency, administrative law judge, or other employee who is or may reasonably be expected to be involved in the decisional process of such proceeding who receives, or who makes or knowingly causes to be made, a communication prohibited by this subsection shall place on the public record of the proceeding:

(i) all such written communications;

(ii) memoranda stating the substance of all such oral communications; and

(iii) all written responses, and memoranda stating the substance of all oral responses, to the materials described in clauses (i) and (ii) of this subparagraph;

(D) upon receipt of a communication knowingly made or knowingly caused to be made by a party in violation of this subsection, the agency, administrative law judge, or other employee presiding at the hearing may, to the extent consistent with the interests of justice and the policy of the underlying statutes, require the party to show cause why his claim or interest in the proceeding should not be dismissed, denied, disregarded, or otherwise adversely affected on account of such violation; and Applicability.

(E) the prohibitions of this subsection shall apply beginning at such time as the agency may designate, but in no case shall they begin to apply later than the time at which a proceeding is noticed for hearing unless the person responsible for the communication has knowledge that it will be noticed, in which case the prohibitions shall apply beginning at the time of his acquisition of such knowledge.

(2) This subsection does not constitute authority to withhold information from Congress.

IMPOSITION OF SANCTIONS; DETERMINATION OF APPLICATIONS FOR LICENSES; SUSPENSION, REVOCATION, AND EXPIRATION OF LICENSES (80 Stat. 388; 5 U.S.C. 558).

Sec. 558. (a) This section applies, according to the provisions thereof, to the exercise of a power or authority.

Sanction Procedure.

(b) A sanction may not be imposed or a substantive rule or order issued except within jurisdiction delegated to the agency and as authorized by law.

License application.

(c) When application is made for a license required by law, the agency, with due regard for the rights and privileges of all the interested parties or adversely affected persons and within a reasonable time, shall set and complete proceedings required to be conducted in accordance with sections 556 and 557 of this title or other proceedings required by law and shall make its decision. Except in cases of willfulness or those in which public health, interest, or safety requires otherwise, the withdrawal, suspension, revocation, or annulment of a license is lawful only if, before the institution of agency proceedings therefor, the licensee has been given—

(1) notice by the agency in writing of the facts or conduct which may warrant the action; and

(2) opportunity to demonstrate or achieve compliance with all lawful requirements.

When the licensee has made timely and sufficient application for a renewal or a new license in accordance with agency rules, a license with reference to an activity of a continuing nature does not expire until the application has been finally determined by the agency.

EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS; EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT STATUTE (80 Stat. 388; 82 Stat. 1312; 5 U.S.C. 559).

Sec. 559. This subchapter, chapter 7, and sections 1305, 3105, 3344, 4301 (2) (E), 5362, and 7521 of this title, and the provisions of section 5335(a) (B) of this title that relate to hearing examiners, do not limit or repeal additional requirements imposed by statute or otherwise recognized by law. Except as otherwise required by law, requirements or privileges relating to evidence or procedure apply equally to agencies and persons. Each agency is granted the authority necessary to comply with the requirements of this subchapter through the issuance of rules or otherwise. Subsequent statute may not be held to supersede or modify this subchapter, chapter 7, sections 1305, 3105, 3344, 4301 (2) (E), 5362, or 7521 of this title, or the provisions of section 5335(a) (B) of this title that relate to hearing examiners, except to the extent that it does so expressly.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

APPLICATION; DEFINITIONS (80 Stat. 392; 5 U.S.C. 701).

Sec. 701. (a) This chapter applies, according to the provisions thereof, except to the extent that—

(1) statutes preclude judicial review; or

(2) agency action is committed to agency discretion by law.

Definitions

(b) For the purpose of this chapter—

(1) "agency" means each authority of the Government of the United States, whether or not it is within or subject to review by another agency, but does not include—

(A) the Congress;

(B) the courts of the United States;

(C) the governments of the territories or possessions of the United States;

(D) the government of the District of Columbia;

(E) agencies composed of representatives of the parties or of representatives of organizations of the parties to the disputes determined by them;

(F) courts martial and military commissions;

(G) military authority exercised in the field in time of war or in occupied territory; or

(H) functions conferred by sections 1738, 1739, 1743, and 1744 of title 12; chapter 2 of title 41; or sections 1622, 1884, 1891-1902, and former section 1641(b) (2), of title 50, appendix; and

(2) "person", "rule", "order", "license", "sanction", "relief", and "agency action" have the meanings given them by section 551 of this title.

RIGHT OF REVIEW (80 Stat. 392; 90 Stat. 2721; 5 U.S.C. 702).

Administrative agency action. Judicial review procedures.

Sec. 702. A person suffering legal wrong because of agency action, or adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action within the meaning of a relevant statute, is entitled to judicial review thereof. An action in a court of the United States seeking relief other than money damages and stating a claim that an agency or an officer or employee thereof acted or failed to act in an official capacity or under color of legal authority shall not be dismissed nor relief therein be denied on the ground that it is against the United States or that the United States is an indispensable party. The United States may be named as a defendant in any such action, and a judgment or decree may be entered against the United States: Provided, That any mandatory or injunctive decree shall specify the Federal officer or officers (by name or by title), and their successors in office, personally responsible for compliance. Nothing herein (1) affects other limitations on judicial review or the power or duty of the court to dismiss any action or deny relief on any other appropriate legal or equitable ground; or (2) confers authority to grant relief if any other statute that grants consent to suit expressly or impliedly forbids the relief which is sought.

FORM AND VENUE OF PROCEEDING (80 Stat. 392; 90 Stat. 2721; 5 U.S.C. 703).

Sec. 703. The form of proceeding for judicial review is the special statutory review proceeding relevant to the subject matter in a court specified by statute or, in the absence or inadequacy thereof, any applicable form of legal action, including actions for declaratory judgments or writs of prohibitory or mandatory injunction or habeas corpus, in a court of competent jurisdiction. If no special statutory review proceeding is applicable, the action for judicial review may be brought against the United States, the agency by its official title, or the appropriate officer. Except to the extent that prior, adequate, and exclusive opportunity for judicial review is provided by law, agency action is subject to judicial review in civil or criminal proceedings for judicial enforcement.

Form and Venue.

ACTIONS REVIEWABLE (80 Stat. 392; 5 U.S.C. 704).

Sec. 704. Agency action made reviewable by statute and final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court are subject to judicial review. A preliminary, procedural, or intermediate agency action or ruling not directly reviewable is subject to review on the review of the final agency action. Except as otherwise expressly required by statute, agency action otherwise final is final for the purposes of this section whether or not there has been presented or determined an application for a declaratory order, for any form of reconsideration, or, unless the agency otherwise requires by rule and provides that the action meanwhile is inoperative, for an appeal to superior agency authority.

RELIEF PENDING REVIEW (80 Stat. 393; 5 U.S.C. 705).

Effective date may be postponed.

Sec. 705. When an agency finds that justice so requires, it may postpone the effective date of action taken by it, pending judicial review. On such conditions as may be required and to the extent necessary to prevent irreparable injury, the reviewing court, including the court to which a case may be taken on appeal from or on application for certiorari or other writ to a reviewing court, may issue all necessary and appropriate process to postpone the effective date of an agency action or to preserve status or rights pending conclusion of the review proceedings.

SCOPE OF REVIEW (80 Stat. 393; 5 U.S.C. 706.)

Sec. 706. To the extent necessary to decision and when presented, the reviewing court shall decide all relevant questions of law, interpret constitutional and statutory provisions, and determine the meaning or applicability of the terms of an agency action. The reviewing court shall—

Power of reviewing court.

(1) compel agency action unlawfully withheld or unreasonably delayed; and

(2) hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions found to be—

(A) arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law;

(B) contrary to constitutional right, power, privilege, or immunity;

(C) in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of statutory right;

(D) without observance of procedure required by law;

(E) unsupported by substantial evidence in a case subject to sections 556 and 557 of this title or otherwise reviewed on the record of an agency hearing provided by statute; or

(F) unwarranted by the facts to the extent that the facts are subject to trial de novo by the reviewing court.

In making the foregoing determinations, the court shall review the whole record or those parts of it cited by a party, and due account shall be taken of the rule of prejudicial error.
